The next morning, the son, it would appear, was liberated; for he was afterwards found on the forward parent fire dock. As for the monster, Fielding himand was made to bear the consultation respecting what was to be done with him. The result of which con sultation was that they should throw him overboard, and this was accordingly done; and Carr and Galloway were made to assist in doing it. The poor little boy was forward at the time, and notwithstanding his pitcous prayers for mercy, and his screams of affright,

After the confessions were read, the prosecution closed, and the Chief Judge, going one by one through the list of prisoners as they were named in the indict-ment, asked them if they had anything to say in be-half of themselves. Johnson in reply asked leave to wrad a paper he before spoke of, which leave was granted. The paper was evidently prepared under the hope that there was still a hope of mercy for him, but it disclosed no ground upon which such a hope could be grounded. The other prisoners referred their defends to their counsel.

William Young and L.O. C. Doyle, Esqs., addressed the jury in a short speach in their behalf; but it was evident that neither had any expectations of saving them from the penalty so justly due to the aggravated crimes they had been guilty of.

The jury after about a quarter of an hour's absence returned with a verdict in accordance with his Lordship's charge—that the four prison is were GUILTY.
