> An abundance of other facts might be cited to show in England; but the record is a disgusting one and we forbear. We will merely allude to some very record furtier—to the bankruptcy of Lord Huntingtower, the midnight exploits of the Marques of Waterford, the notoriety of the noble lover of Madame Grisi, and were spread out at length, a few months since, in the columns of the Times, the Morning Chronicle, and the London Examiner, and were thus brought so the the wording of marry overy family in the land, by means of the very journals which profines a holy horner of the degraded and licentious conditions of the assessment press in America. And English writers, who and record such things, continue to believe of "the standard of marris" established in England, "the standard of marris" established in England, "the standard of the standar
