We, therefore, make this solemn declaration of our final separation from our landlord, and cast our defiance la his teeth.' WATCHING FOR A TIGER. The spot I selected was the edge of a tank where a tiger used to drink. There was a large tamarind tree on its banks, and here I took my post. A village shikares accompanied me; soon after sunset we took the provision on a hearth about twoke fore from the our position on a branch, about twelve feet from the ground. I should first mention that we had fastened an unfortunate bullock under the tree for bait. we remained quietly on our perch for a couple of hours WHITMORE & WOLFF, without any thing stirring. It might be eight a clock, the moon had risen, and so clear was the light that the moon had risen, and so clear was the light that the moon had risen, and so clear was the light that the moon had risen. sneaking along toward the village, when a party of a Brintparries passing by, stopped to water their bulk locks at the tank. They loitered for some time, and becoming impatient, I got off the tree with a single file in my hand, and walked toward them, telling their lows watching a tiger, upon which they started immediately. I was sauntering back to my post, and whistle, and the same moment a growl rose from the whistle, and the same moment a grow rose from the bushes between me and the tree. To make my situation quite decided, I saw his (the shikared's) black arm pointing nearly straight under him, on my side of his post. It was very evident that I could not regain the tree, although I was within twenty paces of it.

There was nothing for it but to drop behind a bush, and have the rest to Possible of I had nearly the post to Possible of I had nearly the rest to Possible of I had nearly the Possibl and leave the rest to Providence. If I had moved then, the tiger would have had me to a certainty; beside I trusted to his killing the bullock, and returning to the jingle as soon as he had finished his supper. It was terrible to hear the moans of the wretched bullock when the tiger approached. He would run
