"In conclusion, let it always be remembered, that while a sound, practical, common school education is the surest foundation of virtue and patriotism, it strengthens and adorns every CHRISTIAN GRACE, and that without it, the THEASURES OF INSPIRATION ously drawn over the eyes of the public, and he did are in a great degree sealed, and the light which has been mercifully provided to guide man through this world, and shed its rays upon his pathway to im-mortal happiness, is but dinsly reflected."

This would be quite a "circumstance" if true, but infortunately it is like most of the statements that ive been made by the Deacon since he became so regardless of his moral and religious professions as to regardless of his moral and religious professions as to the call of the people, and furnished them with so advocates and journals assorted. In repelling these charges, Mr McGraw, refered to Mr. Williams' conduct when a few years since he thrust his hand into the ported the following names as Marshals for the occapublic treasury and pocketed three dollars a day of the people's money to pay for the time he spent at home attending to his own business, during the recess of the legislature. This could not be called larceny, far from it. Mr Williams, and those who played grab Carters of with him, took care to legalize the act before they poked their itching palms into the treasury, but if any tprivate citizen of Pittsburgh had taken the same amount of the people's money, and had rendered no more service for it than Mr. Williams did for his extra most exemplary -he is a Protestant in religion, and pay, the law would soon provide him with a cell in the western penitentiary.
