The Daily Morning Post.

POLITICAL BRAG. Mr. Clay is undoubtedly a "great hand" at the game of brag—(indeed, in Corvelli's "Thirty years among the players" he is said to have been his opponent, or, as also of the other kindred game known by the name of Polker)—but it requires rather slender nerve than his present (unhappy) engagement for a great stake enables him to sustain. In his late letter-press but one—on the one before last (we really find it hard to remember them in their order)—he really winds up with: "I congratulate you on the satisfactory results of the August elections!" If he had thought twice on this he would have perceived, that however desirable it might be to wish a little to keep up the spirits of his party, yet in preparation a "brag" as he could have no other effect than to betray his own consciousness of the desperate weakness of his hand.

The August elections have exhibited a Democratic gain on 1840, of nearly 75,000, in States which still but little over one fifth of the whole vote of the whole Union, and a corresponding gain also where most elect Polk by a much larger majority than even "Hurried." The smile with which Mr. Clay congratulates his friend Gen. Cass, on this auspicious result, must have been somewhat like that expressed on the features of the Berdianian herb, the sign sign of the workings of the dead.

It is to be hoped that the result of the August elections, how transported must Mr. Clay be by the intelligence from Maine! It is to be hoped that he will moderate his rapture.

"These vigils delight the wretched ends, And in their transport die." Phila. Mer.

The Potato Crop.—We mentioned a crop of two on the unprecedented deficiency of the potato crop, owing to the disease of the plant. Few of our readers, however, are probably aware of the enormous growth of potatoes in this country, of the serious loss—pecuniary or otherwise—that would result from a general failure thereof.

According to the census of the potato crop of the United States, exceeded one hundred and eight millions bushels—equal, in value, at 25 cents a bushel to $22,000,000.

Of this quantity, there were produced in New York, 13,183,614 bushels; Maine, 18,256,230; Pennsylvania, 9,535,563; Vermont, 8,869,751; do New Hampshire, 6,036,606; do
