THE DEBATE IN BIRMINGHAM.—We were present during a portion of the debate in Birmingham, on Saturday afternoon, and were much gratified to witness the great confidence that Mr. Cassius M. Clay was able to display in the presence of the masses of the Democratic party.

At the North, I am represented as an ultra supporter of the institution of slavery, while at the South I am described as an Abolitionist; and in the States of Tennessee, North Carolina and Georgia, our friend John Spivey Smith, as well as others, thought it even necessary to speak of my private feelings and those of my friends in relation to the institution of slavery.

Under these circumstances, there was an absolute necessity for the use which I published, although I regretted it extremely. I understood so to shape it as not to wound your feelings, and I hope that you will find it so.

Had you been here, you would have concurred with myself and other friends in thinking it indispensable to you.

You must be well aware of the very great delicacy of my position.

Another Letter from Mr. Clay. The public have been favored with all sorts of letters from Mr. Clay, written for their a good purpose. Now, by an accident, we are able to give a letter from him not intended for the "public eye," addressed to his Bowdoin namesake, CASIUS M. CLAY, who undertook a little enterprise on his own account, viz: the obtaining of the vote of the whole Liberty party in the State of Kentucky.

It is known to our readers that HENRY CLAY addressed a letter to an editor in Kentucky, declaring that Cassius had no authority for saying he (Henry) was favorable to Abolitionism. After the generous and grand-eloquent efforts of Cassius M. Clay to make things out of the Liberty men, it was certainly surprising to see the editor of the "Liberty" in Kentucky, who is the editor of the "Liberty" in Kentucky, thus rudely snatched from his hand. The letter which follows, was, as will be seen, intended as an apology to Cassius M. Clay for the indignity of this repudiation.

But how did this "confidential" mischievous find its way into the public print? The New York Tribune has the following, which is probably the true answer to the inquiry:

"We now recollect very well Mr. Blair's landing us a letter from Cassius M. Clay, to be sent to him whenever we could well spare it. Never dreaming that it was any thing else than an invitation to speak at some Whig Meeting, we laid the letter on the table, in the inner Editor's room of our office. It was forwarded as soon as we could spare it, and it reached its proper destination. When we next looked for it, it had disappeared. A circumstance to which we attached no importance. The next week we received a letter from Henry Clay to Cassius M. Clay having been picked up by a friend in front of National Hall by some Londoner, who, after showing it round from place to place, and vainly attempting to get it into the Evening Post and Morning News, finally gave it publicity through the Democratic Standard."

ASHLAND, Sept. 18th, 1844. My Dear Sir:—I received your favor of the 10th inst., in which you state that you will be in Boston on the 10th, where it is proposed that I should meet you and I therefore send it to the Hon. Wm. G. Brown, to be forwarded to you.

I am perfectly sensible of your friendly intentions, and feel grateful for them. But you can have no conception, unless you had been here, of the injury which your letter in the "Tribune" has done, and that was nothing in comparison to that which it was likely to inflict upon the Whig cause in the States of Tennessee, North Carolina and Georgia. Our friend John Spivey Smith, as well as others, thought it even necessary to speak of my private feelings and those of my friends in relation to the institution of slavery.

Under these circumstances, there was an absolute necessity for the use which I published, although I regretted it extremely. I understood so to shape it as not to wound your feelings, and I hope that you will find it so.
