OCTOBER. TY THE LATE WILLIS GATLAND CLARK. Solema, yet beautiful to view, Month of my heart. Thou dawnest here, With sad and faded leaves to strew

The summer's melancholy hier. The mouning of thy winds I hear, As the red sunset dies afar. And burs of purple clouds appear, Observing every western star.

Thou solomn month. I hear thy voice-It tells my soul of other days, When but to live was to rejoice-When each was lovely to my gaze; Oh, vision bright-oh, blessed hours, Where are the living rapt ares now I nak my spirit's wearied powers-

I ask my pale and fevered brow. I look to nature, and behold My life's dim emblems rustling round, In hues of crimson and of gold-The year's dead honors on the ground And a gling, with the winds, I feet,
While their low pinious marinur by,

How much their sweeping tones reveal Of life and human destiny. When spring's delightsome moments shone, They came in zephyrs from the west.
They bore the woo t-larks's meiting tone, They stirred the blue lake's glassy broast, Through summer, fainting in the heat,

They linecred in the forest s' ade: But changed and strengthened now, they beat In storm, o'er mountain, gien and glade. How like these transports of the breast,

When life is fresh and joy is new-Soft as the halcyon's downy nest, And transient all us they are true: They stir the leaves in that bright wreath, Which Hope about her forehead twines Till Grief's hot sighs around it breathe-Then Pleasure's lip its smiles resigns.

Alas for Time, and Death, and Care-What gloom around our way they fling; Like clouds in Autumn's gusty air.
The burial pageant of the Spring. The dreams that each successive year Seemed bathed in bues of brighter pride,

Atlast like withered leaves appear,

And sleep in darkness, side by side. From the Knickerbocker.
