The men, seventeen in all, the rest having withdrawn, were brought in line, and at 14 minutes past four o'clock the word "go" was given, and they started compactly together at a aready pace. By an arrangement made for their government, a bell tolled every three minutes, in which time each half mile must se accomplished by every runner who intended to make or proceedings in attachment under the late law, for ten miles within the hour, and, in consequence, the ale at this office.

jy 25 spectators also knew the rapidity of the pace at which hey were going. The two Englishmen, Barlow and eenhalgh, soon showed in front, with Ross, the Indian, who cut out strong work for them and probably hus contributed to their defeat by an exhaustion of their rength early in the race.
