A Prister Paet --- We some time since (says an exchange pener) alluded in rerms of approbation, to a volume of poems published by Bayard Taylor, a young printer, at that time in the office of the Village Record. We tchester. He has since, and with but a few dol lars in his pocket, started on a tour through Europe.

A letter from his pen, written just after his arrival at Liverpool, is published in the Saturday Evening Post.

It embodies the following elever poem:—

LAND AND SEA. There are springs that rise in the greenwood's heart, Where the forest glooms are cast, And the drooping brughs are scatterly stirred,
When howls without the blast. There are hills that lie in the moontide calm, ** 4 On the lan of the quiet cards; Aild flawers that spring in wood and dell, and Around my place of birth. Dencer are these to my pining beart, Then the beauty of the deep; When the moonlight falls like a belt of gold, And the waves are hilled to sleep. The night-winds through the drooping boughs That shade a well-known door, Hath a dearer sound than the breaking waye, Whose crest we are dushing o'er.

When night on the occun came gently down, the vessel's prow: Where the foam-wreath glows with its phospho

Like a crown on a sea-nymph's brow. Above, through the lattice of rope and spar, The stars in their beauty butn; And the spirits long to ride their beams. And back to the leved return,

They say that the sunset is brighter far When it sinks behind the sea; That a softer glow hath the evening star -Not thus they shine to me.

Dearer the flush of the crimson west

When the star of love, with its silver crest, Lights the homes of the tried and true. Yes, take the sea, with its calm and stormits quiet and its wrath:

Through trees that my childhood knew;

And give me the hills of my childhood's home, and the forest's lonely path. My apirit pines 'mid the ocean roar,
Like a bird in a stranger land:
What joy, when its perils all are o'er,
To leap to the welcome strand!

Steamboat wit .- A friend, who never made a joke in his life, but enjoyed the article hegely when manufactured by others, condescended to give us the following at second hand:-Travelling lately on the north river, he overheard two ladies in an adjoining state-room, who kept incessantly calling upon that indis-pensable Figaro, the "Steward." "Steward!" called ne, in a smothered voice as if of intense suffering, "do come and open this window, or I shall die!"-The window was accordingly opened; but directly the other lady exclaimed, "Steward! do come and shut this window, or I shall die!" This, too, was obeyed, when the first order was repeated, followed by the othcrin the same terms—and this continued until things begar to grow serious, and the poor steward commenced turning very red and perspiring with vexation. At this moment a gentleman, who had been a quiet observer of the scene, cried out in a loud voice, "Steward red and perspiring with vexation. At this moment a gentleman, who had been a quiet observer of the scene, cried out in a loud voice, "Steward and a loud voice, "Steward and a loud voice, "Steward and a loud voice, and the scene, cried out in a loud voice, "Steward and loud voice, "Steward and loud voice, and the scene, cried out in a loud voice, "Steward and loud voice, "Steward and loud voice, and the scene, cried out in a loud voice, "Steward and loud voice, and the scene, cried out in a loud voice, "Steward and loud voice, "St ard, why don't you wait upon the ladies there? shut the window until one of them is dead, and then open it and finish the other !"-New York Mirror.
