☞IRON CITY HOTEL,☜
FIFTH STREET,
Next door to the Exchange Bank, Pittsburgh, Pa.
Jacob Boston, Proprietor,
RESPECTFULLY informs his friends and the public generally that he has taken this well known establishment, and has had it thoroughly repaired in all its departments; and it is now fitted up in a style inferior to none in the city. Epicures, and all fond of good eating, will find his larder bounteously supplied with all the necessaries and luxuries the market can afford. It will be the aim and pride of the proprietor to keep his eating department well stored, and in a manner suited to the taste of the most fastidious.
To the lovers of good liquors, too, he can without flattery to himself, offer as good and well furnished a BAR as is kept in the western country. The choicest wines and best of stronger liquors will always be kept in store, for the accommodation of those who may favor him with a call.
His facilities for accommodating the traveling public generally, will be found equal to any in the city. The Stable is airy and capacious, and the best attention will be given to the horses of those putting up at his house.

DENNING'S FIRE PROOF IRON CHESTS.
PITTSBURGH, Oct. 22, 1842.
J Denning: On Friday, the 30th of last month, about 9 o'clock at night, the Planing, Grooving, and Sash Manufactory, owned by Guy, Dilworth & Co., with a large quantity of dressed and undressed lumber, was all consumed by fire.
The Iron Safe which I bought of you some time back was in the most exposed situation during the fire, and was entirely red hot. I am pleased to inform you it was opened at the close of the fire, and all books, papers, &c., saved;—this is the best recommendation I can give of the utility of your safes.

The Daily Morning Post.

"MILLERISM" IN THE TENTH CENTURY.

Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History gives some account of a fearful delusion similar to Millerism, which seized the minds of the people of Europe in the tenth century, and which all the power of the Catholic Church (then established as the supreme church by most of the governments and principalities of Europe) could not supress, Mosheim says:

"Among the opinions which took possession of the minds of men, none occasioned such universal panic, nor such dreadful impressions of terror and dismay, as a notion that now prevailed of the immediate approach of the day of judgment. This notion, which took its rise from a remarkable passage in the Revelations of St. John, and had been entertained by some teachers in the preceding century, was advanced publicly by many at this time, and spreading itself with amazing rapidity through the European provinces, it threw them into great consternation and anguish. They imagined that St. John had clearly foretold, that after a thousand years from the birth of Christ, Satan was to be let loose from his prison, Anti-Christ to come, and the destruction and conflagration of the world to follow these great and terrible events. Hence prodigious numbers of people abandoned all their civil connections and their paternal relations; and, giving over to the churches and monasteries all their lands, treasures and worldly effects repaired with the utmost precipitation to Palestine, where they imagined that Christ would descend from Heaven to judge the world. Others devoted themselves by a solemn and voluntary oath to the service of the churches, convents and priesthood, whose slaves they became in the most rigorous sense of the word, performing daily heavy tasks; and all this from a notion that the Supreme Judge would diminish their sentence, and look upon them with a more favorable and propitious eye, on account of their having made themselves the slaves of his ministers.

"When an eclipse of the sun or moon happened to be visible, the cities were deserted, and their miserable inhabitants fled for refuge to caverns, and hid themselves among the craggy rocks, and under the bending summits of steep mountains. The rich attempted to bribe the Deity and the saintly tribe, by rich donations conferred on the sacredotal and monastic orders, who were looked upon as the immediate vicegerents of Heaven. In many places, temples, palaces and noble edifices, both public and private, were suffered to decay; they were deliberately pulled down, from a notion that they were no longer of any use, since the final dissolution of all things was at hand. In a word no language is sufficient to express the confusion and despair that tormented the minds of these miserable mortals in this occasion. This great delusion was indeed opposed and combatted by the discerning few, who endeavored to dispel these grounds less terrors, and to efface the notions from which they arouse, in the midst of the people. But their attempts were in fact to no purpose, nor could the apprehensions of the superstitious multitude be entirely removed before the end of the century."

THE RIOTS AT CANTON.

The following account of the riots at Canton is very interesting. Information, (says the United States Gazette,) of the occurrence narrated below, was received here some weeks since, but then were no particulars given, and the real cause of the outbreak, and the objects at which the tumult was directed, remained unknown. We are glad to observe that the riot arose more from a spirit of disaffection, ready to express itself upon the slightest provocation than from any reasonable cause of offence given. The concluding paragraph contains a forboding of evil to come, which there is much reason to fear is well grounded.

Some time since the Americans put up a new flag staff in the Square, which was brought out in the Brandy wine—it had a gilt ball—vane in the shape of an arrow and letters N S E W. Shortly after some of the Chinese remarked upon the vane and said it was a sign of war, and ought to be taken down. Mr Forbes the Consul, said if they would give him any thing to replace it, he would take it down. Some of the respectable people speaking to him about it, and saying that the ignorant Chinese attributed the present dry weather, and sickness (of which there is some at Honam) to the vane, he concluded to take it down, and sent on Saturday, for men to come on Monday from Whampoa, to take down the vane, paint the mast and set up the rigging. Meantime a Chop was stuck up in the street, by some Chinese who wanted to get up a riot, that the vane would be pulled down.

When the men were employed in taking down the topmast, a large crowd of Chinese collected—as is the custom when any thing is done. They began to crowd the sailors and interfere with them, and were pushed back to allow of room to work. They commenced throwing bricks at all the foreigners, who were obliged to retire into the Hongs. As the next thing would be the cutting down of the flag staff and probably an attack on the factories, to plunder them, it was concluded to go out and clear the square of the Chinese. The Americans therefore armed themselves with fire-arms, and cleared the square without any difficulty—but when the Chinese had got out they began throwing bricks again, upon which a few muskets were fired over their heads, and one or two fowling pieces loaded with fine shot into the crowd—none were killed, and, I think, none injured by the fire. A short time after, the Mandarins, who had been sent for, arrived with a number of soldiers, and the mob gradually dispersed. Some Marines arrived from an English vessel of war at Whampoa, the next day, and were put in one of the factories to help to defend them in case they were attacked. The next day after, the mast was taken down, (7th inst.) but it was concluded to put it up again, without the vane, and as the Chinese soldiers were afraid, or too lazy to put the Chinese out of the square, the Americans armed themselves again, cleared the square without trouble, and sent up the topmast with the ball and letters, and set the flag, where it remains very quietly.

All the respectable Chinese are sorry that any trouble was made with the Americans, and the head people of some of the villages have put up a chop in the street here, saying that the Americans were peaceable people, good friends of the Emperor and Chinese, and had traded here 200 years without making any trouble—that they had put an arrow in their flag staff as was the custom in their country, but when they understood that it was not the Chinese custom they had taken it down, and therefore they should not be molested. Every thing is quiet now, but how long it will so remain is uncertain; we generally have a row here every two months. For some reason or other, the low classes of Chinese think that there is a great deal of money in the foreign factories, and take every opportunity of making a riot, so as to break in and plunder them. The Madarins have no power over the mob now. Previous to 1839, the sound of their gong was enough to disperse any mob, but now the mob do not stand in any awe of them, and in the riot of 1843, drove them away and they did not dare to return until the next morning, when they found the foreigners were armed and had cleared the square. Nothing has been said about the firing on the mob. Some of the Chinese say that nothing will be said if we shoot the fellows who attack us, while others say that it was a bad thing to fire on them. All agree that we have a right to shoot them if they attack the factories, but are doubtful if we ought to go out in the square and fire, or fire at people destroying the garden or flag-staff.

There are chops put up saying that the people will not allow the English to rebuild their factories on the site of the Company's grounds, and if they attempt to rebuild it, they will be destroyed again. Mr. Lay, the English Consul, has attempted twice to get the foreigners to organize into a company of soldiers for defence, and has offered the services of a Sergeant to drill them, but has not succeeded yet—they prefer to fight on their own book. There will be more riots here be-
