The Daily Morning Post. PITTBBURGH, PA. FRIDAY MORNING, NOVEMBER 3, 1844. Important to Merchant Tailors .- During the past week a case of appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, was tried before the Circuit Court at Washington, which may not be unimportant to me chant tailors. It appeared from the tratimony, says the National Intelligencer, that Mesers. Lane & Tuckseef that city, made a nair of pantahons for a genriemsn and sent them home, ordering the boy net to desert or a gent of Panish or a gent of Panish or a gent of the post of the liver the pantaloons until they were paid for. The gentleman became offended and refused to take them, eupon Messes. Lane & Tucker sued the party before a magistrate, who gave them a judgment for before a magistrate, who gave them a judgment for the value of the pantaloons. From the judgment the gentleman appealed; and the Court decided after hearing testimony and the argument of Barton Key, Esq., for the appellant, and Joseph H. Bradley, Esq., for the appellant, and Joseph H. Bradley, Esq., for the appellant, and Joseph H. Bradley, Esq., for the appellees, that, inasmuch as the gentlen had before dealt with the appellees on terms of credit.

It was their duty to have notified him before they made it was their duty to have notined nim before they made the pantaloons that they had changed their terms to cash, and on that ground, as we are informed, the Court reversed the judgment of the magistrate. bers in Lincolin's Inn, desiring to know, what would be my definition of taste.—I told him I must decline informing him how I should define it; because I know he would publish what I said would be my definition of it, and I did not choose to subject my notion of & to public criticism. He continued, however, his importunities in frequent calls, and in one complained much that I would not give him my definition of taste, he much that I would not give him my definition of taste, much that I would not give him my dennition of taste, is he had that morning got H.
