THE PLAGUE IN MILAN. An ancient couplet, preserved for ages by tradition, foretold that in the year 1630, the devil would poison Club or Rected feet, contracted joints, wry-neck and Strabismus or Squinting, and of Diseases of the Eye.

There is no Institution of this kind as yet in this countries of the try, though much needed.

Patients from a distance would find it to their adsores, had been passed against them. The whole poprantage to be operated on and to be attended to in an ulation were speedily in movement to mark the strange establishment exclusively devoted to the restoration of appearance, and the greatest alorm spread rapidly. the above named deformities and diseases.

The easy access to Pittsburgh, one of the healthiest spots in the country, by river and canal, almost at any season of theyear, would offer great facilities for those churches that machinations of the evil one might be defeated. Many persons were of opinion that the His ample experience and well known success give emissaries of foreign powers were employed to His ample experience and well known success give sufficient guaranty that the welfare of those entrusted to his care will be greatly promoted.

Every thing was believed to have been poisoned by the devil; the waters of the well, the standing corn in the fields, and the fruit upon the trees. It was believed that objects of touch were poisoned, the wells of the houses, the pavements of the streets, and the very handles of the

The populace were raised to a pitch of ungovernae fury. A strict watch was kept for the devil's emissaries; and any man who wanted to be rid of an enemy, had only to say that he had seen him besmearing a door with ointment—his faite was certain death at A RE now receiving their spring importation of HARDWARE, CUTLERY AND SAD-DLERY, to which they respectfully invite the attention of purchasers. Having completed arrangements, about to sit down. A cry was raised immediately that he was besmearing the seat with poison. alcohologous the furnishment of the popular league with the devil to poison Milan. His house was surrounded, and a number of chemical intended as preservatives against infection: but some physicians, to whom they were submitted, decided hey were poison. Mora was put to the rack, where for a long time he asserted his innocence. He confessed at last, when his courage was worn down by torture, that he was in league with the devil and foreign Also, a general stock of articles suitable for the sup-ply of country merchants, to which their attention is invited at his ald stand, corner of Front and Wood anointed the doors and infected the fountains of water. He named several persons as his accomplices, who were apprehended and put to a similar torture. They were apprehended and put to a similar torture. I ney were found guilty and executed. Mora's house was razed to the ground, and a column erected on the spot, with an inscription to commemorate his guilt. While, the public mind was filled with these marvellous are urrences the plague continued to increase. The rowds that were brought together to witness the excations spread the infection among one another. But the fury of their passions, and the extent of their credu-lity, kept pace with the violence of the plague; every ronderful and preposterous story was bel n particular employed them, to the exclusion for a long time of every other. The devil himself had been seen; he had taken a house in Milan, in which he prepared his poisonous agents, and furnished them to his enemies for distribution. One man had brooded over such tales till he became firmly convinced that the wild flights in his own fancy were realities. He stationed himself in the market place at Milan, and related the following story to the crowds that gathered round him: ie was standing, he said, at the door of the cathedral late in the evening, and when there was nobody nigh; he saw a dark colored chariot, drawn by six milk white orses, stop close behind him. The chariot was folowed by a numerous train of domestics, on dark olored steeds.

In the chariot there sat a tall stranger of a majestic aspect, his long black hair floated in the wind, fire flashed from his large black eyes, and a curl of ineffsy, to mount besides him. He had no power to refuse and before he was aware that he had moved, be found himself in the chariot. Onward they went with the rapidity of the wind, the stranger speaking no word, until they stopped before a door in the street of Milan. There was a crowd of people in the street, but to his great surprise, no one seemed to notice the extraordinary equipage and its numerous train. From this he concluded that they were invisible. The house at which they stopped appeared to be a shop; but the nterior was like a vast half-ruined palace He went with his mysterious guide through several large and dimly lighted rooms. In one of them, sur-rounded by huge pillars of marble, a senate of ghosts were assembled, debating on the pregress of the plague. Other parts of the building were enveloped in the thick-est darkness, illuminated at intervals by vivid flashes of lightning, by which he saw a number of gibing and chattering skeletons running about and pursuing each other, or playing at leap-frog over one another's backs. At the rear of the mansion was a wild uncultivated plot of ground, in the midst of which stood a black rock, Down its sides rushed with fearful noise, a corrent of poisonous water, which insinunting itself through the soil, penetrated to all the springs of the city, and rendered them unfit for use. After he had No. 101 Wood street, 4 doors above Diamond alley, shown all this, the stranger led him into another large HAS just received a large supply of New York and Baltimore Spanish Sole Leather, Upper Leather, Philadelphia and Country Kips and Callskins.
