

er they had a right to modify or frame a Constitution, how they would decide, in cases where no mode had been provided.

But suppose the people have no right in such a case to frame a Constitution, that all our ideas of government power being in the people and the right to form their own government, are all to be unlearned—that the people of the State have the right to hold the other two-thirds in subjection—was then, but give them no privileges—and they have no remedy; and it would seem as if the man, who only craves to be a slave, might be considered as one of the best of his race in extension. But are we to suppose that the people of the State have the right to hold the other two-thirds in subjection—was then, but give them no privileges—and they have no remedy; and it would seem as if the man, who only craves to be a slave, might be considered as one of the best of his race in extension.

STEAMBOAT CAPTIVITY—THREE LIVES LOST.

We learn from the St. Louis Republic, that on Saturday night last, at eleven o'clock, the steamboat "Capital," bound from Pittsburgh to St. Louis, was destroyed by fire. The fire was discovered by some of the crew, and immediately the alarm was given. It originated about midway of the boat, probably from some defect in the furnace, and spread with incredible rapidity.

A Mr. Dalrymple, his wife, a son (Master Joseph D.) and daughter, a young lady, were passengers on board. From the accounts we can gather, it is most probable that Mr. Dalrymple and his wife perished in their stateroom. They had been awakened by the alarm, and had barely time to save their lives, by leaping from the deck.
