But the crowing fact is the nature of the soil. It is in a great part pure quartz aand of a greyish to a pearly while listre. A specimen of it being carefully dried by Dr Davy, was found to consist of 98.5 sila- cious sand, 0.5 vegetable matter and I water. This circumstance impresses one very strongly on visiting the cinnamon gardens, it seems so strangs to see a plain of pure quartz sand whitened in the sun, and covered with a laxuriant growth of trees. In rich soils, the aroma is said not to develop iself in the same compar- trated form. Perhaps the name of garden, which is applied to the cinnamon plantations, may be led to an erronious coa- ception of their nature. The cinnamon tree (lasvas cisaamosium) in its natural state grows to the beight of about twenty feet; but the bark, which is the only valuable part, is found to lose much of its highly aro- matic quality in the mature trees. Accordingly, the trees are cut young, when the stems are only five or ar feet long, and less than an inch thick at the largest end. The bark is then stripped or peeied off in long pieces like willow bark, scraped carefully to remove the cuticule, and laid out to dry, during which it curls op in quills, as they are called, and it is then ready for the market, but improves by keeping for a while. The wood is good for nothing but fuel. Owing to the mode of cultivation, the cin- namon garden has very much the appearance of scrub oak, the rich bright green leaves of the small trees being strikingly in contrast with the white plain in which they grow. It is possible that the fragrance of the cinnamon groves may have been sensible to voyagers along the cost of Ceylen; but I do not believe that often hap- pens; no such fact was perceived on board the Brea- dynsine. There is very little fragrance perceptible in the gardens themselves; and the idea of its extending out to see is laughed at in Colombo. It is in a great part pure quartz sand of a greyish to a pearly while lustre. A specimen of it being carefully dried by Dr Davy, was found to consist of 98-5 sila- cious sand, 0-5 vegetable matter and 1 water. This circumstance impresses one very strongly on visiting the cinnamongardens, it seems so strangs to see a plain of pure quartz sand whitened in the sun, and covered with a loxuriant growth of trees. In rich soils the aroma is said not to develop iself in the same carbon- trated form. Terhaps the name of garden, which is applied to the cinnamon plantations, may be led to an erronious coa- ception of their nature. The cinnamon tree (Lawras cinxamonium) in its natural state grows to the beight of about twenty feet; but the bark, which is the only valuable part, is found to lose much of its highly aro- matic quality in the mature trees. Accordingly, the trees are cut young, when the stems are only five or wire feet long. and less than an inch thick at the largest end. The bark is then stripped or peeied off in long pieces like willow bark, scraped carefully to remove the cuticule, and leid out to dry, during which it curls op in quills, as they are called, and it is then ready for the market; but improves by keeping for a while. The wood is good for nothing but fuel. Owing to the mode of cultivation, the cin- namon garden has very much the appearance of scrub oak, the rich bright green leaves of the small trees be- ing strikingly in contrast with the white plain in which they grow. CONNER or IST AND FERRY STERETS, PITTSEURGE. HAVING removed my manufactory from Birmingham. and located it at the above stand, I would to favor me with a call, for any article in my line, viz: Patent Lever Locks, Mortise, "Store door, "Store and Nill Screws, Housen Screws for Iros Works. Irraddition to the above stricles I intend to manofacture and keep a supply of Batebet and Monkey Wreaches, and Stock, Taps and Dies, for Steam Beau purpose. Together with a variety of articles not enumerated. All of the best quality and at relu	same degree. But the crowning fact is the nature of the soil. It is in a great part pure quart sand of a greyish to a pearly while lustre. A specimen of it boing carefully dried by Dr Davy, was found to consist of 98-5 sila- cious sand, 0-5 vegetable matter and 1 water. This circumstance impresses one very strongly on visiting the cinnamon gardens, it seems so strangs to see a plain of pure quarts sand whilened in the sun, and covered with a lavariant growth of trees. In rich soils the aroma is said not to develop iself in the same conten- trated form. The cinnamon plantations, may be led to an erronious coa- ception of their nature. The cinnamon tree (Lawrus cinaxamonium) in its natural state grows to the beight of about twenty feet; but the bark, which is the only valuable part, is found to lose much of its highly aro- matic quality in the mature trees. Accordingly, the trees are cut young, when the stems are only five or Six feet long, and less than an inch thick at the largest end. The bork is then stripped or peeled off in long pieces like willow bark, scraped carefully to remove the cuticule, and leid out to dry, during which it curls op in quills, as they are called, and it is then ready for the market, but improves by keeping for a while. The wood is good for nothing but fuel. Owing to the mode of cultivation, the cin- namon garden has very much the appearance of scrub oak, the rich bright green leaves of the small trees be- ing strikingly in contrast with the white plain in which they grow. It is possible that the fragrance of the cinnamon groves may have been sensible to voyagers along the coast of Geylon; but I do not believe that often hap- pens; no such fact was perceived on board the Bran- dynize. There is very little fragrance perceptible in the gardens themselves; and the idea of its extending out to sen is laughed at in Columbo.
