> ter. They advanced, encompassing the lakes in their course, and arrived at the head of the peninsula. The savage had awaited them, either ignorant of their approach, as from the most authentic accounts, is most probable, or with the spirit of a Curtius, devoting himself as some have supposed, to inevitable deuction, that he might allure the English to a position there defeat would be certain. He received their fire, but, before he fell, returned it with so deadly an effect that the captain and another soldier was mortally wounded. The party having socured their victim, returned towards the spot where they had left their packs. But their course had crossed the path of the red men, who had followed, and having seized the spoil, knew the number of their foes, and when Lovell and his company approached they rose from the earth with an exulting yell, and howered their death shots fast upon the devoted band. The white men retreated and, protected by the natural defences of the situation to which necessity had driven them, and sheltered by those pines which still bear the scars of the battle, maintained themselves for a whole day, with heroic resolution, against an overwhelming force. Although invited to surrender by the display of long ropes, which, in the expressive language of signs, told them of the luxuries of captivity, they fought with a determination to meet a quick and honorable death, rather than to expire amid torments of a protracted martyrdom. Night at length arrived, and the savages, weary of the contest, and disheartened by the loss of their chief, and of more than three fourths of their warriors, and dispairing of overcoming such obstinate resis-m tance, ratired, and the miserable ramant of their opponents who survived the battle, were suffered to a It was no time then for indulging nice feeling of delicacy. Of all those who had knelt before their Creator at the dawn, sixteen only could bow in adoration at evening, to pour their thanksgivings to their Preserver, that amid such perils, they had escaped unhurt; ten were gone to their final account, and eight were groaning with the agony of mortal wounds.

The conjecture did not admit to delay; while they yet paused, the bullet might be aimed at their own hearts, they could not wait longer to pay the tribute of respect to their dead companions, lest they, too, hould sleep in their last repose—they could not delay, to sympathise with those whose life was fast ebbing out, for they might share their fate. Silently they re-tired and shandoned both.

Some of the wounded gathered strength to crawl from the spot where they fell, to perish more miserably from putrefaction and starvation. A situation more miserable cannot be imagined. They had sustained the labors of the day without food, for their Philadelphia and Country Kips and Callekins. "May be not," was the laconic reply, and the gun of Chamberlain priming itself gave him an opportunity to falsify the prediction of the savage, whose ball passed over the white man with the erring aim of a dying foe.

It is also said, while Chamberlain was taking dead-y aim, the Indian called to acquaint him that he had omitted the motion, whose anticipation was so fatal to the chief; it might have been from a magnanimity not ery consistent with the character of red hunters; or it might have been from the exultation of expected conquest, when he supposed his enemy neglected what was so necessary, at a moment when mistake or neglect could not be retrieved. Captain Lovell, mortally wounded by the shot of the single Indian at the commencement of the battle, received another ball. He fell and expired, with eight or more of his company, killed by the first distharge, and the command devolved on Lieutenant Wy. man, who sustained the conflict during the day, and urvived the hardships of the march.
