Days, and even weeks escaped thus, perly attended. Duys, and even weens escaped and, till at length the young soldier, recovering his strength insisted on being informed to whom he was indebted for so many benefits. There was in the expression of s countenance, something that commanded respect, which perhaps even excited fear; the good woman naned her mistress, and, with all possible delicacy, related to him the miserable circumstances in which she had found him. He entreated to see Mademoiselle A. giee, that he might lighten his heart of some of its grattude; he was not yet able to rise, nor was l o read; but he was, nevertheless, sufficiently re feel the weight and weariness of an idle life. Mademoiselle Agiee consented to the demand of the oung soldier, and paid him her first visit; she remained with him only a few moments, but promised to re-turn and bring him books, desiring him to make his choice, and offering to read for him till he should be no lunger forbidden to occupy himself. He accepted her proposal with joy, and selected the "Life of Turene," and a book on geometry. Every day Made-moiselle Agiee passed some hours with the con-valsecent soldier, who listened eagerly as she read, often interrupting her to make observations, which were always just, and sometimes very striking. He did not seem easily inclined to confidence, and it was not till some time had elapsed, that one day, as if led on by a military ardor beyond his power to restrain nachinery, he is now enabled to sell his well known uperior Locks at such prices as will set foreign to speak of his projects to Mademcisells competition at defiance. on by a mintary ardor beyond his power to restrain, he began to speak of his projects to Mademcisells. Agies; she smilled as she listened to him; "In truth," said she, "I believe we shall one of these days see you a colonel!" "Colonel!" replied he in a tone of indigenation, "I shall be a general—and perhaps—" but he interrupted himself as if alwared at what he weet. he interrupted himself, as if alarmed at what he was about to say, and perhaps even internally rebuking himself for what he had said. "Until now," said Mademoisella Agiee, "I have never asked you a single question, either with regard to your country or family. By your accent, I conceive you to be a foreigner, although you belong to a French regiment." "I am a Corsican, and my name is Napoleon." The young man was Bonsparte. Mademoiselle Agiee, every day became more and more interested in Napoleon; and when he was entirerecovered, she equipped him and supplied him with the money necessary to enable him to rejoin his regi-ment. On taking leave of his benefactress, the young man was much effected. "Believe me," said he, "I shall never forget what you have done for me! You will hear of me!" He departed, and Mademoiselle, with her mother, returned to Geneva. Very soon the name of Napoleon became celebrated; and Mademoiselle Agiee, in reading the Gazette, exuited in the successes of her protege, who, meanwhile, seemed to have entirely forgotten her. Years passed thus away, when, sometime before the battle of Marengo, Bonaparte passed through Nyon, a little town of the Can-ton de Vaud, twelve miles from Geneva, on his way PTI I SDUNGIA.
