PITTSBURGH, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 12, 1845.

The Daily Morning Post. LINES.

BY JOHN PHYLLIPS-MOLEXVIII. All flesh is grasse, and doth wither away. Even as the flower that doth partch with the sunne No physick can serve our lyves for to stave.

When the clockes past, and the hower full runne, By death to all sortes God's will must be donne, But how or when no mortall man doth knowe. We yet in what sorte death will bring him lowe.

Some by long sickness thyr lyres do resigne, Senie by the aworde are constrained to dye; And some by famine to earth do incline, And some in the floudes deep drenched do lye, Some with the lawes from death cannot flye, Subject to miseries we are on the earth, And certain to dye, even from the fyrst byrth.

No charter of life is granted to man, Our time is but short, our dayes are not long, Our substance is death and do what we can, To earth we shall tourne be we never so stronge. Let as not think that death doth us wronge, When, or in what sort, he shall us arrest,

No, let us be ready to welcome this guest. Consider that time runnes on without stay, If he once passe by he will not tourne back; And as the time tades, man's dayes weare away, For the web of this lyfe runnes still unto wrack; In time keeps watch then, least death the house sack, For such that live carelesse, glorying in sinne, Seeke to themselves destruction to winne.

He has seen the world,has moved in society,-he knows something. Perchance his very last fare was a candidate for the Aca lemy, making his nine and thirty visits: hence a notion of literature for our cabman. He drives a deputy to chambers, and—he gets a touch of politics. A cor ple of medical students hire him; they can talk about nothing but operations; and lo! our Pheton picks up a tincture of medicine. It is with regret we find ourselves compelled, by our love of truth, to add that the place assigned to him there, is always the bottom of the pit. The hackman belongs to the old times, and has no more to do with any person, than is strictly necessary, in the discharge of his duties; very dull, but The cabman, on the other hand, belongs to the ad-

Most backmen wear for a badge a coachman in oiled hat and blue wrapper, his whip in one hand, phlet. For sale at the Book Store of and in the other a purse, with the motto, "Reward

There is one which left a profound and lasting impression. It is nearly a year since Cantillon told me what I Cantillon drives No. 221. He is a mun, apparently between forty and fortyfive, of swarthy complexion and strongly-marked features. At the period of which I speak—the first of January, 1831—he wore a felt hat with a scrap of lace, these Locks in Pittsburgh, of whom they may always a dark claret-colored coat with a scrap of livery, and boots with a scrap of their top-leathers. bit of lees, his bit of livery and the remains of his sopleathers. Jessah spied out at once the fellow-servant. His cab; too, was of a chocolate color insted of a daub of yellow or green; and, stranger still, the springs of the leather-top were silver-mounted. I smiled, and Joseph saw that I was satisfied with his good taste: I gave the rest of the day to himself. I settled myself snugly and squarely upon Gantillin's fine cushions, he sirew over my knees a meat, codes-colored gig apron, and at the click of his tongue the horse was off without his using the whip, which during the whole drive indeed remained at rest.

Cantillion received my answer with a gesture which plainly said—'I know the place well enough, and the name too.' Being arthe time-engaged with 'Antony,' and the Cab being very comfortable, I set myself to thisking how I should manage the close of the third and—a matter which was troubling me considerably.

For the poet, I know not an instant of greater happinces then when his work gatisfies him. So many are the days of toil be bas gone through, so many the hours of discouragement, so many the moments of doubt, that when, in the struggle of the man with his mind, he sees the obstinate idea which he has tried at every point, attempted on every side, yield at last to his paraeverance, he has a moment of pleasure somewhat like—if in his infinitely lower and less perfect cash.

All of which is one to cash.

Thus, or nearly thus, ran my thoughts: in my mind's The Weckly Mercury and Manufacturer selves entirely to my liking; I was satisfied, and from selves entirely to my liking; I was satisfied, and from a neighboring sphere I heard sounds—by no means equivocal—of applause, showing that those who pass my world in review found it to their taste, and were atisfied with me.

These pleasing reveries did not prevent me from One insertion, observing, though still plunged in my doze of gratified pride—the poet's opium-heaven,—that my neighbor was dissatisfied with my silence, disturbed by my fixod, reflective eye, and absolutely afflicted at my profound pre-occupation. I had told him, on etting in, I should want him for four or five hours, and he was almost in despair at the thought, that during all that time I would persist in my silence,—to the great disappointment of his earnest desire to talk.
At last his symptoms of uneasiness increased so that At last his symptoms of uneasiness increased so that they fairly pained me. I opened my lips to say a word to him. He seemed quite relieved. Unluckily for him, the idea I had been wanting to close my third act, struck me the moment I had balf turned round to the side where he was, and half opened my mouth to speak; and I fell back quietly into my place murmuring to myself. It will do-it will do. Cantillon thought I must have lost my senses. Then he heaved a sigh.

A moment after, he drew up, saying, 'Here is th upon his solitary seat, cut off from all intercourse with the world about him, his only amusement a crack of his and love him; and in the next place for yours, who whip at a passing comrade—without a thought of his love him but probably do not know him.
