Well, that was her name. I found Madamoiselle Marie lying on a bed with a nurse by her. I cannot tell you how pretty she was, with her pale face, eyes sed and her hands crossed upon her breast; looking just like the Virgin she was called after. 'The doctor unde her smell of a little bottle; I sha'nt place. 'The doctor made her smell of a little bottle, a fool, soon forget that bottle. He had laid it out of his hands upon the chest of drawers, and I like a fool, 'my limbs fail me. Where is the place!'

'There—on the second floor, where you see a light eeeing it had brought her to, said to myself. 'It must be a famous scent, that.' I hung around the place without pretending anything, and the moment 'Post Tennish and the moment'. their backs were turned, I pulled out the stopper and put the neck of to my nose. Oh! what a dose! It arm under mine; I could feel his heart beat. 'If should find her dead?' he exclaimed wildly could not have been worse, if I had snuffed up a swarm of bees. 'Good,' said I, 'I know you now!' and the hot tears filled my eyes. M. Eugene said to me, 'Do not distress yourself, my good fellow, the doctor engages for her.' I said to excell the months of the country of the gages for her.' I said to myself, 'He may be a very smart fellow, this doctor, but when I get sick, 'tis not |

'All this time Madamoiselle Marie was recovering more and more. She looked round the room and said, -'Strange! where am I, I don't know this room!-'That may be,' said I, for the reason you were never in it before.' 'Hush!
