PITTSBURGH. SATURDAY, MARCH 29. 1845.

The result of the election for Overseer of the Poor, on Thursday last, exhibits the Native strength in a very forlorn condition. They brought out one of their strongest men; had the corners of the streets covered with firming bills, calling upon the party to chowing the grand total of 65 votes—nearly 200 less of the assembled Aldermen of the city have after a trial and argument of several days duration, removed than they polled for Mayor last January.

This shows conclusively that in Pittsburgh, as well as elsewhere, proscriptive nativism is dying away.—
