Yet, notwithstanding all these things, people are perfectly indifferent about Mexico, but quite anxious about England.

Of course the disparity in the means and character of the two countries has a material effect on the importance to be attached to their expressions and their movements; still the apathy exhibited on the one hand, and the anxiety felt on the other, are matter of

But it seems to us that there is a more intimate connection between the angry movements of Mexico and England than meets the eye. Mexico is unaccountably gentle and moderate, considering her bearing before the annexation bill passed, while the sudden and unlooked for anger of Britain, is no less inconsistent with her heretofore quiet and calm deportment about Oregon. There can be little doubt that the blusterings of PEEL and his friends in Parliament were concerted for the especial purpose of encouraging the presumed -and we should not be surprised, if, (when the news of the debate on Oregon in Parliament reaches Mexiea,) our now sweet-tempored, deprecating neighbors
