nor is their valor of that kind that would induce them to crush their benefactors, or fight for the overthrow of the free institutions that they have been so long demanding for their own oppressed country.

No one will deny Mr. O'Connell's great popularit induce them to aid by act or thought, the power which has kept them so long in bondage, in spreading its iron rule over the only land where the injured of every clime can hope to find protection from oppression. Mr O'Connell may pursue whatever course, in this contest between the United States and Great Britain. he may deem best. He may consider it patriotic to vaunt of the valor and power of Ireland's oppressor: he may expect to tickle the vanity of John Bull be predicting the triumph of British arms on American soil; but in this work of humility he will receive but little encouragement from the Irish people, and if he wishes to lead a party that desires to see the American Eagle humbled before the prowess of England, he will find but few followers in such a scheme among his warm-hearted countrymen.

The editor of the American is writing a series of articles against the Pittsburgh Bank, and in general terms-entirely too general to be perfectly satisfaction ry to those who are not as intimately acquainted with the iniquities of the institution as our cotemporary ar concluded that it is because there is some person conhandsome as the editor of the American.
