BRITISH MOVEMENTS.

Just as our paper is going to press, we find the following as the concluding words to an article in the London Times of the 10th of April, which coming from that source, may be considered as meriting attention: "When we reflect on the difficulty of transporting even a party of settlers across the whole continent of America, on the impracticability of operating beyond the frontiers of the Union, either to the south or the west, and on the impossibility of reaching the Columbia by sea except in time of peace, we are disposed to regard the actual danger of an attack on our settlements on the Oregon as purely illusory; and we have no doubt that long before this intelligence reaches the forts on the coast of the Pacific, they will have been placed by Sir G. Seymour, and the squadron under his command, in an efficient state of defence." We may add that other intimations of the same nature are thrown out, though more obscurely, in other numbers of the Times for the past month.
