For early memories around me throng,

Of three score miles and ten:

Ohlitimes, and manners, and men;

he I look behind on my journey so long

I limbt behind and am once many young, the Best and brave and bold.

The many neart can sing, as of yore it sung.

Basire they called me old.

I do not see her—the old wife there-

Shrivelled and beggard and grey;

I do not see you, daughters and sons,

In the likemess of women and men;

But I kis you now as I kissed you once, My fond little children then.

And as my own grandson rides on my knee

I can well recollect I was merry as he-

The merry, bright eyed little wight.

Tis not long since—it cannot be long.-

Since I was a boy both straight and strong.
Yet now I am faeble and bent.

Or plays with his imop or kite,

My years so soon were spent,

A dream, a dream—it is all a dream

A strange, sad dream, good sooth; For old as I am, and old as I seem,

Forever young-though life's old age

That keeps the old man young.

ORIGIN OF THE GREY MARE BEING THE

of that power which men usually arrogate to them-

a young lady of wit and humor, then present, replied

"it might possible be so sometimes, but much oftener the gray mare being the better horse!" and very obligingly entertained the company with the following account of the rise of that proverbial saying, which is made use of when a woman governs her hasband.

A gentleman of a certain county in England having married a young lady of considerable fortune, and by the same method. However, to end all disputes

I have five horses in my stable; you shall harness these to a cart, in which I shall put a basket containing one hundred eggs; and if, in passing through the coun-will doubtless think it odd, and it may be deemed imnolite for any one, much more a stranger, to ask such a question; but as a very considerable wager depends

The gardeman at that moment entered the room,

"What!" she exclaimed, "and will you not take her chen? But I say you shall; for I am sure the grey mare is the better horse."
