It is well known that if Mr. Brackenridge's property lies upon the canal, and as it is rendered more valuable by its location in the neighborhood of that improvement, the citizens do not consider it probable that a man of Mr. B's contracted feelings would favor a rival improvement that might have a tendency to render his estate less valuable.

MONONGAHELA BRIDGE. Messrs. Editors.—The increase of trade and the immense amount of business done at Pittsburgh, has rendered it indispensable that the bridge now in operation, should be placed at a height to prevent being an obstruction to the navigation.

It is admitted, that it has heretofore been a hindrance, and on many occasions an absolute bar to the passage of boats, and it is now proposed to require the use and occupancy of the beach or landing, from the Point on the Allegheny river, to the first dam on the Monongahela river.
