To the Gentlemen of Pittsburgh.
THE subscriber most respectfully informs the gentlemen of this city and vicinity, that he has commenced the BOOT and SHOE making business in Fourth street, opposite the Mayor's office, at the stand lately occupied by P. Kerrigan. Having been foreman in some of the most fashionable bootshops in the Eastern cities; and having furnished himself with the best French and American calf skins, he hopes by his attention to business to merit a share of public patronage. To those gentlemen who have kindly patronized him he returns his sincere thanks, and can with confidence appeal for the goodness of his work and knowledge of his business. A. TERNAN.

THE Sin of Ignorance is easily forgiven. Many of the "nostrums" of the present day are put out by persons who have no knowledge of the science of medicine in theory or practice, and in order to hide their ignorance cry out loudly against the "Ignorant Pretenders," and bribe others to boast for them, which oft times has gulled the unsuspecting, and for want of a proper knowledge of the diseases they pretend to cure, no doubt think they cure when they do not, therefore they are to be pitied, but not half so much as those who take their "miserable compounds," but they not only lose their money, but miss the advantage of that necessary advice which the real practical physician, is always able to give. We look to the tailor for an improvement in the mode of dress; to the medical man for an improvement in the science of medicine—and this accounts for the great superiority of Dr Swayne's Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry over all other medicines ever offered to the public for the cure of all diseases of the Lungs and Breast, Coughs, Colds, Consumption, Asthma, Spitting Blood, Liver Complaint, Pain in the Side and Breast, Broken Constitution, &c. Remember always to inquire for the name of Dr Swayne, as all preparations which have the name of Wild Cherry attached were stolen from the great original preparation. The genuine is only prepared by Dr Swayne, corner of Eighth and Race streets, Philadelphia. For sale by

CONSTABLE, BURKE & CO.,
(Front st. between Wood and Smithfield.)
HAVING again got their shop re-built, and are preparing to make Vault Doors at short notice and of a superior workmanship. We would take the liberty to state that the Vaults of our manufacture that were in the late fire saved their contents in perfect order.
Further, we are prepared to put on YALE'S PATENT LOCKS, which are equal to anything in America, if not superior, for the following reasons: They cannot be picked; they cannot be blown up with gun-powder; there cannot be false keys made to open the lock; they are cheaper; they are much more durable; their keys are more convenient; they will not go out of order; in short, they cannot be opened by any burglar under the most favorable circumstances. We would further state, that we are authorised to pay any one $100 who will open the lock without the key.

WARRANTED GENUINE.—Dr. WILLIAM EVAN'S CAMOMILE PILLS.
CERTIFICATES.—Letter from the Hon. Abraham M'Clellan, Sullivan County, East Tenn., Member of Congress.

WASHINGTON, July 3d, 1835.
SIR—Since I have been in this city I have used some of your Dyspeptic medicine with infinite benefit and satisfaction, and believe it to be a most valuable remedy. One of my constituents, Dr A Carden, of Campbell county, Tennessee, wrote to me to send him some, which I did, and he has employed it very successfully in his practice and says it is invaluable. Mr Johnson, your agent at this place, thinks you would probably like an agent in Tennessee. If so, I would recommend Dr A Carden, as a proper person to officiate for the sale of your celebrated medicine. Should you commission him he is willing to act for you. You can send the medicine by water to the care of Robert King & Sons, Knoxville county, Tennessee, or by land to Graham & Houston, Tazwell, East Tennessee. I have no doubt but if you had agents in several counties in East Tennessee, a great deal of medicine would be sold. I am going to take some of it home for my own use, and that of my friends, and should like to hear from you whether you would like an agent at Blountville, Sullivan County, East Tennessee; I can get some of the merchants to act for you as I live near there. Yours respectfully,
ABRAHAM M'CLELLAN, of Tennessee.

The Daily Morning Post.

The Shoeblack's Story.

From a Chronicle of Old Dublin City, an Irish Historical Romance.

Meanwhile Chancey and M'Quirk had reached the light paper lantern, which, glowing with the light of a farthing candle, illuminated the shoeblack's stand.

"Shoes cleaned, gentlemen?" exclaimed the professor, in his most inviting tone.

"Ay, shoes, and every thing else besides," replied Chancey dejectedly.

"Faith, gentlemen, you're in a bad way, sure enough," rejoined the little man, surveying, as well as his dim light would allow him, the lower extremities of the strangers. "By dad, gentlemen, you must be surprisingly fond of air and exercise, to think of walking the streets such a night as this."

"We came in a sedan chair," said M'Quirk, with an attempt to look aristocratic.

"And met with a misfortune," continued Chancey.

"A trifling accident," said M'Quirk.

"By reason of which, my good man," observed the barrister," we are, as you see, both wet and dirty."

"As gentlemen often has been before," suggested M'Quirk.

"Hold your tongue, and be easy, M'Quirk," exclaimed Chancey, imperiously. "And we want to know, my honest chap, if you can direct us to any place, close by, where we'd be allowed to dry our stockings, and settle ourselves up, while you're cleaning our shoes."

"Why, then, I don't think of any place convenient," rejoined the shoeblack, reflectively; 'unless, may be, gentlemen, you'd come into my little room—it's not twenty steps from this spot—and take an air of the fire there, and settle yourselves. I was just on the move when you came up.'

Chancey agreed to the hospitable proposal, and following their little entertainer, who packed up the instruments of his craft, and tucked them under his arm in a twinkling, the barrister and Mr McQuirk walked down the archway, about a dozen yards, and entered a door which stood open, and gave admission into a dark passage. Their guide raised a latch, and pushed open a second door at the end of this lobby, and the party entered the little shoeblack's sanctuary. A candle was burning in the room, and a cheerful fire blazed on the hearth. The whole chamber, in all its arrangements, though unequivocally indicating extreme poverty, was nevertheless distinguished by a neatness, order, and decency, which surprised his visitors. A little, pale-faced boy, with large, earnest eyes, and a sad sickly aspect, was seated by the fire as they entered, and occupied the room alone.

"How are you, avick—how are you, darling?" said the humble proprietor of the chamber, and the child ran gladly to meet him, and threw its little arms around him. "God bless you, mavourneen. And how are you, little Willy, this evening?"

"Oh! finely, grandfather," replied the child, in a sweet and gentle voice: and suddenly perceiving the strangers, he timidly drew back, and eyed them gravely from behind the skirt of the old man's coat.

"There is two good gentlemen, little Willy, come in to dry themselves by the fire, darling. Don't be afraid of them, cushla," said the old man, patting the child upon the head.

The child peeped earnestly at them again, and then, smiling in his grandfather's face, ran away, and drew two chairs before the fire.

"That's a fine fellow, Willy. Take care of the strangers, darling, and there will be a blessing on you always, said the old man. "Now, gentlemen, sit down, and take an air of the fire, and just slip off your shoes, and I'll soon make them shine."

He accordingly withdrew a little, and applied himself to his task, hissing and blowing all the while like a groom wisping down a vicious horse. The little boy sat on a small box, placed against the wall, and a little withdrawn from the fire-place, whence he examined the two visitors, and scrutinized their finery with quiet, wondering curiosity, and in perfect silence, except when a deep short cough interrupted. Chancey and M'Quirk extended their limbs towards the fire in a very exhausted state of body, and in no very cheerful mood of mind. Meanwhile the old man having completed his task with elaborate care, washed his hands and face, and throwing off his apron and exchanging the other articles of his professional uniform, he sat down by the fire along with his two guests certainly the most respectable figure of the three.

"Don't hurry yourselves, gentlemen," said the old man, "Let the puddle dry completely before you attempt to rub it off. I'm an old hand; take my advice, Willy, draw nearer to the fire—darling, he's asleep—asleep, God bless him." And the old man looked at the little child's pale face and closed lids with their long dark lashes, and the wan forehead, with the dark hair parted over it, all calm and motionless in the innocent sleep of childhood, until the tears gathered in his eyes and chased one another down his rugged cheeks. "I'm uneasy, about that child. The craiture's very wake and sickly," said the old man. "That little child is my only friend—my last companion, gentlemen. God bless him, he's the loveliest little creather. He has just the ways of his darling mother—and the looks of her out of his eyes—and the smile is so alike it goes to my heart. Oh, Willy darling, you won't leave me."

The old man rose gently, and taking the patched coverlet from the humble bed, which stood at the far end of the room, he laid it gently over the sleeping child, and kissed the little thin unconscious hand which lay by his side. He then resumed his seat, and gazed long and mournfully upon the shifting embers of the fire.

"The longest life, gentlemen," continued the old man, "is no more than a vapour—ever changing and soon gone; and sometimes, when I'm sitting here by the fire, with no one near but that little child sleeping sweetly in all its innocence, the thoughts of the pleasant times that is gone over me like a dream—old friends and old times comes crowding about me, till the years that have separated us, and the changes that has come over me vanishes away like a thin cloud, and leaves me among them all like what I used to be in the times that's gone. My father served the O'Neilp of Carrigalough, and his father before him, and his before him again; and seeing how all the Reillys before me was in the family, it would have been a quare thing if I did not serve them too. I did serve them, and there never was such a favourite as me. From the hour of my birth, in childhood and manhood, I was about the old castle. When my father—God rest him—died, they made me the herdsman in his stead, and I married my poor Nell (the heavens be her resting place) shortly after. There wasn't such a girl as her anywhere. I never seen her like. She'd go to the end of the world with me, and lay down her life for my sake.

We had one child—a daughter, a beautiful child; and we were as happy and merry as the days were long, until King James' wars began. Then who was for the field so soon as the O'Neills of Carrigalough—and I, to be sure, along with them. Poor Nell, I thought she'd break her heart the day I went. I never saw her again; she died when I was away, and that was my first misfortune. I never was a happy man since. But no matter, we were all in Boyne. It was a rousin' day. There was a bit of a scrap of a ditch, with a hedge on top of it, and a whole troop of us was dismounted, waiting beside our horses behind it. My master commanded, and his two brothers were there, and finer men than the three of them never put foot in stirrup iron. And when the cannons began at the other side, smokin' and peelin' away like a thunder storm, he commenced jokin' and funnin' us, and he turns round to me, and says he—

"How do you like that music, Mick?" says he.

"I have seldom heard worse," says I, just as pleasant as himself.

"Well;" says he, makin' answer, 'if I'm to judge by your looks, Micky, you'll be dancin' to it before long something smarter than a minuet,' says he.

"With that a great bullet came roarin' like a storm,
