first cannon shot that opened the conflict. Far on the right cemes down on Hongoument, Jerome Bonaparte, with his twelve thou-and men. A sheet of fire runs along the walls of the chateau, and a gap opens in the advancing columns of the foe. Its mangled head melts like first work before the destructive fire. The smoke of battle covers them from sight, and rolls up the valley, and lo, I see nothing but the melee of horne's and riders, the tossing of banners, and the scaring of the French eagle amid the cloud of war, and I hear naught but the roar of artillery, the braying of trumpets, the blat of the bugle sounding the charge, and the neavy shock of cavalry.

Amid the confusion and terror of a scene like this which the imagination will call up on such a battle field, how naturally does the mind rest on some single character, or incident, and gather around it all the interest of the fight. It may not be so with others, but I find it true of myself in all circumstances. I remember, when standing on the top of the colonade of St. Peter's and looking down at the tents of thousands, that were waiting the blessing of the Pope. I forgot all in a poor pilgrim beggar and his boy that reclined on the ample steps. Their distant home among the litalian hills, their weavy suches strey slumbered there in the unital, their weavy suches as they slumbered there in the unital, their weavy suches as they slumbered there in the unital, their weavy suches as they slumbered there in the unitality, spurred into his footsteps, and placed him and he fell.
