THE THREE WORLDS. BY REV. 4. A. ROSZEL. The world in which we live, is bright With beauty and with lovliness; And many a form of life and light With fairy mean and gorgeous dress, Allures with gay and glad deceit

Our wandering eyes and roving feet. The world to which we go is pure The wayworn pilgrim's home of rest; Its pleasures are as rich and sure As He, whose presence gives them zest;
A happy realm, that knows no care, The wise, the great, the good are there.

Or else the world to which we go, Is one of keen or constant pain,
A horrid prison-house of wo,
Where darkness gnaws its heated chain,
And dismulshricks of fell despair. nt the thick and lucid air,

Three worlds, oh God, and may we here, Prepare to shun the world of grief, Resist with holy hope and fear, The fierce assaults of unbelief. And saved from death's profound abyse, In triumph gain the world of bliss.
