It will be seen by our Telegraphic despatches that the steamer Pacific is announced as safe, are to be of the Sharpe pattern, with some imhaving put back in a damaged condition, into the river Shannou, in Ireland.

will be remembered, sailed from Liverpool on the 28th December, 1850. On the 6th of January, 1851, when more than half way across the coan, she broke a shaft. After adjusting things as well as possible, she turned towards Halifax. Jan. 9th, ander sail, but making little headway in that direction, she turned back at 10 P. M., January 10th. At E.P. M., January 22d, she arrived at Cork, and the news of her safety was sent out from Liverpool by the Africa, which | sailed the following week, and arrived at New York February 16th.

There are two great rivers or channels running one through the Atlantic and the other through the Pacific Ocean, that produce remarkable ef fects upon the climate of the globe. The Gulf es New Foundland, it stretches across the Atlantic Ocean till it reaches the coast of Ireland, Scotland and England, and even the northern affair. shores of Norway. The waters of this ocean river are much warmer than those of the ocean through which it runs; and it preserves its identity and distinctness from the Mexican Gulf till it is lost sight of in the regions of the northern pole. As it passes along our Atlantic coast, it warms the atmosphere, and renders the climate warms the atmosphere, and renders the climate much milder all along that coast. It produces turn England adritt, and make their own terms awaiting orders from St. Petersburgh as to his destithe same effects on the climate of New Foundland, of Ireland, Scotland, England, and even Norway. His hypotheris embraces various causes as conspiring to produce the Guit stream. A principal one is the tendency of tropical stream. A principal one is the tendency of tropical stream and the pole, the result of their being made lighter than temperate or arridwaters by hear. The course of the current is accounted for by the rotary motion of the globe, which deflocts waters and those going south to the east, and those going south to the wat. The glavanic properties of the Guif stream, and the large proportion of salts they hold in solution, are other causes, assigned by Lieutenant Manry, for this yast occan river.
