STEALING THUNDER. Twenty-three years ago the best abused man

In this nation was Gen. Andrew Jackson. Whigs, Abolitionists-all, in fact, but steadfast Demoerats, hurled curses both loud and doep at the Prars ago: head of the old hero. Murder, treason, the ruin of his country, were some of the crimes laid to his charge. But the storm passed over, and the sober second thought of the people prevailed. The Whige and Abolitionists, however, never principles that they ever did. Yet what do we | tonnage of the vessels employed. find those parties doing now ? One of them calls together a National (9) Convention, representing a little more than half the States of the Union. and a superannuated old granny is made chairman of that Convention merely because he was, in the prime and vigor of his manhood, one o Jackson's friends, and an editor of a paper reprecenting the sentiments of Jackson. The other of these parties calls a National Convention at Philadelphia. It meets, and nominates Andreu Jackson Donelson for Vice President of the United States, merely because he bears the old hero's name, and was brought up in his family. His name is paraded over the whole country not as A. J. Donelson, or Andrew J.; but as Andrew

Juckson Donelson. The Democratic party made Francis P. Blair a rich man, worth now at least a third of a million. He was not yet satisfied. He wanted more wealth and honors; but the party, and Mr. Polk at its head, preferred to bestow confidence and honors upon others. This was doubtless done with General Jackson's advice, and Mr. Blair in his old age must have vengeauce. So be does what Van Buren did when he could not

But he has sat at the table of Jackson, enjoyed his hospitality and kindness, borne his name, and deserted his principles, and the Know Nothings say that is a sufficient qualification and recom-

We suppose that when the Republicans make their nominations Mr. Blair will be similarly honored The few old familiar friends of Jackson that yet remain should prepare themselves for public service. They will all be wanted as American Association. They also advised the candidates of the Republican and the American parties. Donelson was his Monsieur Malayropos. Being a family connection of his wife, the General was forced to tolerate him about him, and to grin and bear, with all the philosophy be could muster, the scrapes and difficulties into which Donelson was constantly get ting him. Donelson's most remarkable trait is ar biding want of common sense, which has prevente blm, notwithstanding the prestige of his relationship the wife of Jackson, from having the least political weight where personally known. "He ratted from the Democratic party because President Pierce refused to take him and certain members of his family, for office, at his own valua tion. For months before he turned up a Know Nothing, the locofocor of Nashvilla was what he asked of the Administration, and the ut dignified and impotent personal abuse showered by bim at the street corners for the benefit of street corner audiences, on the President.
