[From the New York Spirit of the Times.] "Life on the Ocean Wave," "A life on the Occan Wave!" The man who wrote if was green; Ve never has been to sea. And a storm he never has seen.

He never has seen a wave As it dashed o'er the vessel's deck, I never has seen a fire at sea. I'r been floating upon a wreck.

He never has been aroused From this morning's gentle doze, By the sound of the splashing water, As it fell from the horid hose.

Re never has beard a man Scrubbing right over his head, With a noise sufficient to rouse

From the grave the slumbering dead He never has seen a fat woman Growing thinner day by day And leaning over the vessel's side, Throwing herself away.

While peonla look carelessly on, Though in tears the woman may be, And unfeelingly say it is nothing at all, Only the roll of the sea.

Sca sick he ne'er has been to his toes, And crept into bed in his cost. While every motion increased his throas, And his follings were all in his throat.

That man may have sailed in a boat,

In some public, or on a sound, But if he has been to see, and wrote Such a song he deserves to be drown'd. [From the True Flag.]

A fortnight passed, and one morning as Mar? tha Warren sat beside that fever couch, the sick man sank into a quiet sleep. On his waking, she well knew hung the crisis of his fate. They scarcely dared hope that he would live. Hours passed on, and still those devoted watchers sat motionless at his bedside. It was long past noon when he awoke at length, and they saw, with joy that could only find utterance in prayers and tears, that they might hope for his recovery. There must be suffering yet, and weakness, a tedious convalescence and much care; but to them, there was no more of sorrow now. When he heard Martna's voice he knew her at once. them, there was no more of sorrow now. When he heard Martna's voice he knew her at once, but he manifested little surprise at her presence. He was quite too weak to reason about anything, and her tones were very soothing. She spent much of her time with him during the next week. He seemed scarcely to think of the suffering t, or the unseen future, absorbed in that gree bliss of listening to her voice. Ho sat one morning in his easy chair at the
