LINES TO A CLOUD.

Through all the sky a vapor sail of white,
There is no other cloud in view,
Save that which is now softly lying
Upon the bosom of the silver sea,
As if some rock-bound island lying
Had dropped a plume upon the air.
While I say whether art thou prose,
Or poetry, though no word is written,

A fleecy cloud is earth and sky,
And though no sighing zephyr
Though to the sense is stirring, your soul knows
The Creator is moving in his might.
For Him alone sleeping in the vast
Can cloud be still as this cloud is.

You cannot hear a single tone,
Starting through the silent glade,
They, too, are hushed in slumber deep,
Like death even more than slumber resembles.
They do not even start in sleep.
They are not even dreaming.

But Oh, strange cloud art I very like
As if thou were in a living thing—
As some stray bird, fled from its flock,
Yet by mistake on the breezes alone is,
And courting an aerial woo,
Still speeds it with all its power to win it.
Upon the journey they have come!
Thus many birds, their many loves,
Urged by no impulse of mortal,
Soar, ever toward the skies.

Have me Mark God, in the glorious
Which leads the warm march of the sun.
Thunders around, which time must hear,
Calling the clouds their mates to them,
Filling so high, and God's bow is
His banner as the winds unfold,
Which, Jackie upon line, when unfurled,
Keeps sunlight in its outer world,
Given to startled men to read,
The torch of lightning, flashing red!
And coupled then as wedding cloths, to be
A shower in this revelry!

Ah! foolish cloud, thy mate lie
We all soon be lost within the strife
Thy greenful rain, which only grow
To mingle on the silver snow,
Which then have sipped at morning bowers,
From cups of many-colored flowers,
Before fairies and humming bird
Had from their leafy covers stirred,
Would melt and vanish in the fray
A few large drops of summer rain
Would fall upon the cold, dark pools,
As fallen ideal from one that's slain.
And that would end thy day.

Better remain, fair cloud, and be
A blessing to you desert edge!
Some eyes from earth would gaze on thee,
Some hearts would glad, how seeing why
A cloud of love art I sympathy;
For the heart which is affectionate
Loves even things inanimate
Which the Creator hath endowed
With beauty such as thine, the cloud!

In vain, in vain, thou will not stay;
Thou speed st westerly away,
Pointer and fairer I thee spy,
Like a new world for me the sky;
And now the earth hidden from my view,
Lost in the depths of heaven's blue.

THE SMUGGLER'S REVENGE.

A SEASIDE YARN.

In a few months Brown was married to Kate Furness, and for a year all went on happily. Gilbert, by exerting what little interest his father possessed with the country members, procured for a lieutenant in the coast guard, and from that day it was remarked that more seizures were made along the shore, and the Petrel went more rarely to the coast of France. Knowing well the character of the man they had lost as a friend, the Petrel's crew became dispirited, and Brown speedily found that the worst day's work he ever did was his quarrel with George Gilbert.

One dark night, however, after they had ascertained that Gilbert was on the sick list, the smugglers had arranged to effect a landing of several tubs of spirits, and this was to be brought about as follows:

About a mile from their usual landing place, where the shore was less rocky than nearer home, to a cliff, on the summit of the cliff, was attached a strong block and pulley, with one man to work it, a second as a general assistant in case of need, and a third some quarter of a mile off on the look out. Then the lugger ran in as close as possible, and the tubs were floated off and conveyed by the smugglers to a near cranny, there affixed to the pulley, and then wound up to the brow of the cliff, when they were conveyed by the second men to the third, who soon disposed of them in a convenient stackyard, to wait till called for. But the smugglers had "reckoned without their host," as the saying is. The sick list was merely a sham, and in less time than served to convey four tubs up to the cliff from the beach, a shrill whistle from the smuggler's outpost announced that danger was abroad. The smugglers on the beach regained their lugger and awaited the safe advent of the rest to sheer off. But it was too late. George Gilbert, with four or five men, was running to the scene of action, the smugglers on the high ground were intercepted, and after a short conflict were worsted, and by Brown's order retired, leaving one of their number shot through the body on the grass, and Brown himself a prisoner, though not before he had sent a bullet through the hat of one and the leg of another of his assailants.

He was dragged off to the Preventive station, and there detained in safe custody till morning, when he could be taken before a magistrate. During that night he bitterly reproached Gilbert with his treachery in turning his hand against his former shipmates, and taking advantage of the knowledge he had acquired on board the Petrel, to capture her captain. He then went on to ask his old school-fellow if he thought that a mere foolish quarrel justified such hatred as his. For a few minutes, Gilbert looked at him with a smile of hate, blended strangely with contempt, ere he replied.

"Think you, Brown, that a petty squabble like that would have really turned the old friend of twenty years standing into a lifelong foe, or that a few blackguard words, followed by a well directed bullet from a wrong headed idiot like you, could have made me what I am? No—it needed something more to do."

"And that something more was?" asked Brown, eagerly, in spite of himself—

"Listen, and you shall know a secret," said the other.

"A year or two ago I loved deeply, purely and truly, a village girl. Aye—you may smile—but men like me can love as well—or far better than people of your kind—your love may have been a plaything for your vanity—mine was the hope of life. I loved—was rejected, after having been coldly deceived—and loved on still. I could have borne that. Aye—I loved and was a fool for my pains. She I loved might have been a girl with no more heart than head—a jilt—but though thus driven from the only hope whereby my soul then seemed to anchor—my trusting love flung in my face—I forgave that, and would have carried my secret lovingly to my grave. She loved another; and I was to furnish mirth for my rival. We lived one evening I was walking out over yonder cliff—I saw her sitting by the side of him she loved—who could not love her with half the intensity I had done—I heard words of endearment—words I shall never more hear or speak in this world now—then I heard my name mentioned with many heartless jest by her, for whom I had suffered so much unrepiningly. I heard enough to tell me that in their eyes I was fit to be mocked and sneered at by a false coquette—to be the topic of the coarse jests of an empty-headed boor. My blood was turned to gall—that night I swore a fearful oath—I have kept the first part of it already—for that girl was Kate Furness, and the man was—yourself; aye—you—John Brown—the prisoner of the Coast Guard to-night—the committed for trial to-morrow—the transported—it there be justice in the land—at the next assizes. And I will keep that oath still further."

So saying, he walked out and left his prisoner to his reflections—which were not of a very pleasant nature. Not that the contents of Brown feared for himself, but for his wife, who was hourly expecting her confinement. He knew that if he was be transported, she could be at the mercy of Gilbert in some respect—and he knew enough of the ingenuity of his captor to feel sure that he would allow nothing to baulk him of his revenge.

"Scoundrel!" shouted he in his despair, "if I hear that my wife and the child at unborn suffer aught at your devilish hands, I will come back, if it be three thousand miles and twenty years hence, to take such a revenge as man shall never forget."

These words were heard—not by the one for which they were intended—but by one of the coast guard outside the prisoner's door, who remembered them long after the poltroon was wearing his heart out in a foreign land.

Brown was tried—found guilty of smuggling and firing, with intent to kill, at two of His Majesty's revenue officers, &c., and sentenced to death—which was commuted to "transportation beyond the seas for the term of his natural life." There was the local newspapers of the day called "an affecting scene in court," when his greyheaded father entreated the mercy of the stern Judge on the prisoner for the sake of his poor wife and his unborn child. There was a yell of execration from the assembled mob outside the sessions-House as Gilbert passed out, to which that amiable personage vouchsafed a contemptuous sneer as sole reply. And in a few months the capture of the Petrel by the ever-vigilant Gilbert, who broke up Brown's gang, and the story of the trial and the sentence were speedily forgotten, save by the convict's wife and a few sympathizers smuggling, who, over their pipes and grog, would often avouch their opinion that Brown would yet come back again to keep his oath of which—thanks to that loquacious member of the coast guard, who originally overheard it—they were aware. With one of these men Brown kept a correspondence, and thus knew everything that took place in his absence. But Gilbert appeared to have forgotten his old grudge against Kate, and so Brown's heart grew light on that score. The revenue officer only bided his time till he could wreak his vengeance more terribly through her son.

THE LAW OF LIBEL.

In Pennsylvania the entire design of the law of libel is to keep people from fighting. The criminal prosecution for libel is simply intended to prevent a breach of the public peace. The wisdom of past Legislatures has seemed to have acted upon the ground that a black eye or bloody nose, is a worse public evil, than a maligned character, and accordingly have made a libel punishable because it tends to a breach of the public peace, and fortunately, as it was manifest that a man would sooner fight when a disagreeable truth was told about him than a lie, the old English doctrine of "the greater the truth the greater the libel," was held good. In 1856, the Legislature of Pennsylvania passed a law which gives the defendant a chance to prove the truth of the matter charged as libelous, and that if it was published with good motives and for justifiable ends, in order that the malice which the law presumes from the fact of publication, may thereby be rebutted. This was a step in advance, but there are other steps yet to be taken. There is no reason why a man should be punished for a libel which he never saw, heard of, or knows any thing about, and in Pennsylvania this can be done. It would be well if our Legislature would pass an act in regard to the publication of libels, making it penal to circulate libelous matter, after notice given, or upon proof of actual knowledge of the libel: for now every news agent who sells a newspaper, or every bookseller who sells a book, is presumed in law to know their contents, and is held responsible for every libel they may contain.

Our friend, Col. Foster, is posted in these matters, and we suggest to him the propriety of introducing a bill in the Legislature, which will remedy the evils of our present laws upon this subject.

WHAT IS AN AGENT.

Many legal difficulties arise from people doing business for others. As long as an employee suits his employer, his acts are assumed and defended. But when difficulty arises, the employer, especially if he is dishonest or loose in his business morality, endeavors to shift responsibility upon his agent. It is a matter of importance then for those who do business for others to know what their powers are, and it is equally important for principals to know how far they are bound by the acts of their agents. In legal parlance, an agent is a person appointed to transact the business of another. It is a legal principle that whenever a person has a power as owner to do a thing himself, he may do it by the agency or instrumentality of another. An agent may be appointed by words, by a written power to act in certain matters, or his appointment may be inferred from circumstances. If an agent agrees to perform certain duties for a consideration, the performance can be enforced by law. If he engages to render services to his principal without remuneration, the principal only can recover damages for the non-performance of the duties. If a person is appointed a general agent, the principal is bound by all his acts which have relation to the business, but a special agency can not bind a principal for any acts which exceed his authority. The extent of an agent's authority, as between his principal and third parties, is to be measured by the extent of his usual employment; representations of an agent will bind the principal; payment to an agent is the same as payment to a principal; under many circumstances the principal is responsible, in civil action for the negligence or fraud of his agent, but he is not criminally liable for his acts, unless expressly commanded to do such acts except in the case of libel. In Pennsylvania, the principal or owner of a newspaper is responsible for the criminal acts of his agent. We hope this legal anomaly may soon be remedied.

FILLIBUSTERING.

The prompt action of Comodore Paulding has given a death blow to fillibustering in Nicaragua. Perhaps he did not literally obey the instructions of government, for the reason that his instructions were general and not specific, but he saw that a coup de main was necessary, even if his instructions were exceeded. For the boldness and skill with which he acted he deserves credit and praise. He has done honor to the navy and to the country. He has given the death blow to fillibustering in that direction. The "perturbed spirit," who, following a bad examplar, have thought to advance their own fortunes and build up schemes for their own ambition, will hereafter be compelled to seek new fields of enterprise. The present administration will not permit the nation to be disgraced by any breach of the well established law of nations, and such men as Walker will soon find their level.

1845.

On the 10th of April 1845, a large portion of the city of Pittsburgh was destroyed by fire. Who that looks at it now can see any thing to remind them of that catastrophe. One thing, however, should be remembered, and that is the generosity of our fellow-countrymen in the day of our adversity. One hundred and sixty-nine thousand, three hundred and eighty-four dollars—the voluntary contributions of noble-hearted men and women was distributed among thirteen hundred and twenty-five persons who suffered at that fire, in the sums ranging from $5 to $650 for each person, or an average of nearly $128 for each recipient of relief.

[Correspondence of the Morning Post.]

FROM WASHINGTON.

What of Time in Congress—Senator Mason's Report—Gregory at Washington—The British Minister's Party—Marching, the Post—George Bancroft—The Presidents.

WASHINGTON, January 30, 1858

The Representatives of the American people have been in solemn convention for just two months, during which period not a single act of interest to the whole country has received its final disposition. Congressmen daily assemble in the Capitol, and deliver long and dull speeches in a breeding Kansas and injured Nicaragua, but no steps have been taken to unearth our hireling push'a traitors in Utah. A general complacency at the apathy of Congress is made by all parts of the country, and if our representatives continue to refrain from action the fault will rest with them, and not with Mr. Buchanan and his Cabinet. Meantime our law makers pocket their pay and punish a great quantity of Cognac brandy.

The Report of Senator Mason on the capture of General Walker is an able document, and meets with universal approbation. While the conduct of Walker is condemned in plain but moderate language, a stern rebuke is administered to Commodore Paulding by the distinguished Virginian at the head of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Washington City is filled with visitors from all parts of the Union. The iron men from Pennsylvania and the cotton planters from Carolina—the far-seeing New Englander and the warm-hearted backwoodsman—the blue-eyed, fair-haired maiden of New Hampshire, and Louisiana's "dark glancing daughter"—are all astir here, and all engage in the festivities of the day with a zest and a heartiness characteristic of the American people.

Napier, the British Minister, has given a party in honor of the marriage of the Princess Adelaide. It was attended by all the celebrities of Washington, and in point of numbers, intellect and fashion was probably unequaled by any other yet given at the capital. Among the lions of the evening was Mackay, the poet—a jovial, merry fellow—a favorite with the ladies, and evidently a lion of the vines of France and "the roast beef of Old England." The simple attire of the famous bard was in striking contrast with the gaudy dresses of some American snobs, and spoke volumes for the good sense of our distinguished visitors.

The eminent American historian, George Bancroft, is now in this city, and receives from all parties and classes that attention deserved by his eminent public services, his exalted worth and commanding intellect. As a statesman and a politician, Bancroft occupies an enviable position, but it is as a man of letters that he excels, and his fine history of our United States is a splendid monument of his learning, industry and ability. Mr. Bancroft is far advanced in years. A feeble form, a feeble step, and locks white and thin, indicate decay and approaching dissolution, but still the unextinguishable and genial old man labors with his pen and dispenses with liberal hand the rites of hospitality. On Thursday night Senator Douglas gave a party in his honor. The venerable historian was the cynosure of all eyes, and delight to the company with the brilliant wit, his laughter provoking anecdotes, and interesting reminiscences. George Bancroft is a man who has done much to advance the interests and establish the reputation of his countrymen, and now when the genial old man, full of years and honors, is about leaving earth for a better land, his grateful fellow citizens vie with each other in paying him every mark of esteem and regard.

President Buchanan is in good health but bears marks of care and labor. He is incessantly besieged with seekers after place, and is much annoyed by constant cries for office. He is notwithstanding this, in excellent spirits, and is determined, as a statesman and a patriot, to do the whole duty in reconciling the interests of the mighty country of which he is the worthy Chief Executive. IRON CITY.

Shocking.

The Boston Courier proposes as a punishment for those who use bad grammar that they should be confined in their own houses with permission to read nothing but congressional speeches. If this should fail to reform them, we recommend the daily reading of the New York Tribune.

VARIOUS THINGS.

—The Newark, (New Jersey) Evening Journal has seen a circular pearl, five inches in circumference, taken from a Patterson oyster.

—A clergyman was walking out one day, and passed two little boys one of whom made a bow. As he walked away he heard the following edifying conversation. Why John didn't you know that was Parson day? "Of course I did." "Why didn't you make a bow." "Why mother don't belong to his church."

—A young lady in one of the leading circles at Washington was complimented by a gentleman on the simplicity and good taste of her dress, at an evening party. She replied:—"I am glad you like my dress; it just cost eleven dollars, and I made every stitch of it myself!" When our young ladies pride themselves upon the home manufacture and cheapness of their attire, instead of the expensiveness and foreign importation, we shall have fewer "broken" fathers and husbands.

—A son of the original Joe Smith, the Prophet, and member of the Mormons, now resides at Nauvoo, not having accompanied the Saints in their begira. On him the Prophet's mantle was to have fallen, and on becoming of age, he was to have been declared the head of the Church. Brigham Young is President of the twelve Apostles, but has exercised the Chief Presidency nominally only a regent, during the minority of Joseph the younger. The latter is now about twenty-four years of age, and differs essentially from the Ex-Governor of Utah as to political matters, though believing in the Church as organized by his father. He is also opposed to polygamy, and other peculiarities of Mormonism as developed in Utah. It is said that delegations arrive every year from Salt Lake to receive the blessing of this youth, and urge him to assume the leadership of the Church, as is his right. He is represented to be endowed with good intellectual faculties, and with a fair share of pluck.

—The weight of specie in the Banks of New York city is sixty tons.

—The contest in the primary election for Supreme Judge of Pennsylvania, is likely to prove very warm between the friends of the rival candidates Sharswood and Porter.

—The weather seems to be as remarkable in Europe, as in America. Their are gardens in the vicinity of London, where summer roses are in full bloom.

—Green peas and new potatoes are said to be abundant in New Orleans.

—Lord Napier gave a magnificent fete to the British Embassy on the 25th inst., in honor of the marriage of the Princess Royal.

—A horrible murder and suicide were perpetrated at the Red House, California, opposite the Pioneer race course. The proprietor of the house, a man by the name of John Murphy of this city, murdered a girl named Mary McGlynn, who was employed by him as a servant, by shooting her in the head with a pistol, and then cutting her throat. He subsequently took his own life by inflicting eight severe stabs in his left breast, and a frightful and mortal wound in his neck. He died within a few hours. The whole affair is wrapped in mystery.

—The lady who is expected to make Mr. Fillmore the "happiest of men," on the 17th of February next, is a Mrs. McIntosh, a woman possessed of a great variety of charms, solid as well as transitory.

—It has been estimated by Professor Bache, that the waves of the sea, travel at the rate of six and a half miles a minute.

—Mrs. George Taylor, the young lady in New York, who our readers will remember we noticed the forces of the celebrated "Dean case," was brought into court to answer whether she would go with her husband or not. Whereupon she declared that she would not live with him, speak to him, write to him, or look at him. The Judge decided that she might go where she chose. Accordingly she walked off with her mother, brother and friends, leaving her husband to mourn over the loss of a handsome wife, and a handsomer fortune.

Editorial Festival.

A number of our eastern exchanges are in favor of the Editors of the State holding a Grand Festival at some time and place that may be agreed upon by the majority. The Germantown Telegraph and the Chester County Times shout it Philadelphia as the place and the 10th of February next as the time. We are decidedly in favor of the proposed Festival; but we would suggest Pittsburgh as being a better place, and the 22nd of February as being a better time. We feel confident that Pittsburgh would suit the Editors of Western part of the State better than Philadelphia; and we think the 22nd of February a better time than the 10th, as we could then in addition to the occasion, celebrate the birthday of the venerated Father of our country. What say our editorial brethren of the West?—Brownsville Times.

WHAT IT IS DOING FOR THE SICK.—Wm. Schuchman, Esq., the well known Lithographer, says: "I have frequently used Boerhave's Holland Bitters, and find it invariably relieves indigestion and debility."

Rev. Samuel Babcock says: "I found special relief from its use, for a severe headache, with which I had long suffered."

J. W. Woodwell, Esq., says: "I have used Boerhave's Holland Bitters myself, and recommended it to others, knowing it to be just what it is represented."

Alderman Jonathan Neely, of Lower St. Clair township, says: "I have derived great benefit from its use for weakness of the stomach and indigestion."

Jas. M. Murphy says: "After several physicians had failed, Boerhave's Holland Bitters removed the pain from my heart and side, arising from indigestion."

The editor of the Kittanning Free Press says: "After one of the best physicians in this place had failed, Boerhave's Holland Bitters cured me of the worst form of dyspepsia."

Fenton Felix, the only manufacturer of the "Original Extract of Quinine," says: "I know that your Holland Bitters is one of the best medicines in the world for a disordered stomach and liver."

Dr. Ludwig, editor of the Packet, Baltimore, pronounces it a medicine deserving the confidence of the public.

Dr. Harbaugh, the leading German physician of Pennsylvania has prescribed it frequently during the last three years, with marked success, in debilitated states of the digestive organs, or of the system generally.

The manager of Hilton's Vinegar Factory says: "I used it myself, and was therefore induced to try its effects upon my wife, (troubled with the great debility common to all of a consumptive habit,) and really it is doing her more good than anything she has ever taken."

Caution!—Be careful to ask for Boerhave's Holland Bitters. Sold at $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5, by the sole Proprietors, Boldman Page, Jr., & Co., corner of Third and Smithfield streets, and Druggists generally.

☞ NO FAMILY SHOULD BE WITHOUT HOOFLAND'S GERMAN BITTERS.

Children afflicted with the Summer Complaint entirely cured by them.

CAMDEN, N. J., March 14, 1855.

Dear Sir—It is with much pleasure that I inform you of the great benefits derived from the use of your German Bitters in my family. During the greater part of last summer, my son, aged two years, was severely afflicted with the Summer Complaint in the worst form, for which various remedies prescribed by Physicians and others were used, but with no avail. I also sent him to the country, but it proved of but little benefit. Having a bottle of German Bitters in the house, I was persuaded to try that, which to my satisfaction I extremely rejoice that I did so. They soon effected a perfect cure, and my child is now enjoying health. I have also used them in my own case, and in my family, and have no hesitation in saying that no family should be without them.

Respectfully, yours, JOHN W. PARIS.
