PITTSBURCH:

WEDNESDAY MORNING FEBRUARY 17. MUNROE STEWART. In Tuesday's Post we gave it as our deliberate of our position. The three defendants were tage to our city, if no other. In this connecs currents, which is beautiful ooth in design and another's society, and when the one was ar- interests materially and permanently. rested for crime, nothing could be more natural than that the other should be suspected of complicity. At the inception of the criminal design, Charlotte Jones alone knew the fact that her uncle and aust had money, and her avaricious nature and fiendish desire to retain Fife as her paramour, prompted the murder. She hated Stewart because he, as she believed, was making efforts to induce Fife to leave her. She would not confide the murder to him and share the proceeds of it. Nor did Fife intrust the secret to Stewart, otherwise he would have shared the murder and Charlotte would have stood watch in place of actively participating in the crime, as she did. It is abourd to suppose that Stewart was an accesso" ry only, the argument of the Dispatch that he was a principal, from the allegation that there was blood upon his clothes, is not warranted by the other facts in the case. Stewart i either guilty of marder, or is innocent of all criminal knowledge of the taking of the life of the two old people. We firmly believe he stands in the latter position and should be pardoned at once, and not be permitted to remain in a state of suspense almost worse than death itself. He has certainly suffered enough already, both mentally and bodily for being found in bad-company, which in the opinion of nine-tenths of the community is the extent of his criminality. The theory that Stewart was not present at the murder, but he had previous knowledge that it was to be committed, we cannot for a moment believe .-The relation between himself and Charlotte Jones precludes a supposition of such know edge, and if Fife had trusted him with it. he would have insisted on his active participation in the affair. No. Stewart is innocent, and Governor Packer should pardon him. The voice of the community, as of one man, says this. The jury which tried him are satisfied tainly guilty, and does not demand the blood of one whose unfortunate association with bad company has brought him to his present company has brought him to his present problem and the present that it is the first and the has done, he has been Janes at the time I show the execution are calen all legal technicalities and side scenes, and of pardon apply to it the strong common sense and sound | But the G vertiment has it in its own lower t judgment which he possesses. This done we too the guit as innocence of Stewart. The look upon the pardon of Munroe Stewart as a proper control would be to rejecte him for such certainty. The most rigid regard for public time as would enable the public prosecutor to justice and the supremacy of the laws do not try him apon the indictment still pending agains demand the execution of a man unless all the him for the murder of Elizabeth M'Masters; if circumstances point to his guilt with the most found guilty upon that indictment, and up a the unerring certainty, and in this case no such circumstantial proof in the possession of the certainty exists. On the contrary the sound- Government, the public would be fully satisfied est, the most judicious and most unprejudiced with his expension. If not, the Executive clem minds among us believe Munroe Stewart innocent of the crime of which he has been convicted and for which his life must be cut short next week, unless the Governor steps in and exercises that power with which he has been

of his innocence, or at least that there is now a sufficient doubt of his guilt to entitle how

Day after day, month after month, and year after year they can treat their readers to a disquisition upon a single subject, and yet should pardon Stewart on the indictment upon they always, apparently at least, give something new, or, at all events, present their subject in a new light and with new forms of ex-

The aggregate would form a Bodleian Library It is astonishing that men can produce from their brains such a mass of words upon a simple theme, and yet we see every day that it is done. The multifarious essays upon "Kansas," which everywhere meet our eyes in the columns of newspapers, have called to our memory the following paragraph, which Thomas Carlyle, in his quaint style, wrote many years ago about newspaper writers. He says "But, indeed, the most unaccountable ready writer of all is, probably, the common editor of a daily newspaper. Consider the leadin articles, what they treat of, how passably they are done. story which went the rounds some years ago in relation to a country store keeper in Mississippi. His customers, most of them wealthy planters from the surrounding country, were in the habit of buying on long credits, settling nce a year after the cotton crop was disposed of. One day—an unusually busy one with him for an unusually large number of his customers had called in-he recollected to have sold a saddle which he had forgotten to charge upon his books, and to save his life he could not remember which of his many patrons had been the purchaser. He looked over their names in the index of his ledger to refresh his nemory, but all to no purpose. Einally he onceived a bright idea and resolved to chargea saddle to each and every account of his plantation neighbors, taking it for granted that when " settling time " came all would dispute the item save the actual purchaser of the sads, dle. Having sold one, he charged upwards of thirty saddles and when settling day did come, seventeen of his customers actually paid for the saddle without dispute or remark. The tory was originally told as an illustration of the loose manner of doing business in Mississ ippi, in the days of such institutions as the Brandon Bank The saddle was well sold at all events and the tradesman kept his own

The following most remarkable scientifi discovery has been made by a cotemporary, whose imagination, when he wrote, must have been stimulated by something not less potent than Jupiter's own nectar. Speaking of earthquakes he says: But what is accepthquake! God flung of his earth of ours by a golden chair, mail to to the foot of the throw. And sometimes, ingel on some good mission bound, chances uch with the tip of one white wing the straight med chain. It slightly vibrates from Earth to Throne; the globe just trembles in respons This is at earthquake-nothing more.

The Angels should be more careful as they fly or they will ruffle the feathers of their wings. If our cotemporary can find the place where that chain is "hitched on " to this mundane sphere he might "go up." Taking the above as a specimen, his brain must be so etheralized that there is no the least danger of his becoming "light headed."

Ab Ashley's Feat in Melon Stealing. Ab Ashley was a real live Hoosier, notorious for everything in general, and stealing melons in particular. In melon time he was the dread of he whole neighborhood, for when he visited vas entirely dostroyed. This was a singular rait of his character-something unaccountable -for, aside from that, he was considered one of he best fellows in the world. Stealing melons, and plundering patches, seemed to be part of his nature, for it was evident that it did not arise from any niggerly disposition or selfish motives. de was a real open hearted kind of an individual, always grawing more melons than anybody else, and giving them away more freely than anybody dee. They were no object to him, yet he could not resist the temptation to steal from his neighoors, just for the fun of the thing. But as some me said, "It is a long lane that has no turn;" and likewise had Ab followed the practice stealing melons all his life he would have got to be a melon thief of long standing. But such a tate of things was not destined to last always. 'A change came over the spirit of his dream recollect once, in a melou seasou, some young sters called at Ab's house, and after telling hi of the fine patch that Deacon Aikers had, propos ed to visit it. Ab was on hand without a mo nent's besitance, and so the company set out a was fairly dark. Before proceeding further. I my say of Ab, in the language of the poet, "He work whiskey," as well as he did melons, and he boys in whose company he was, having looked to the future and brought along a bountiful sapply of the "good critter," he was soon en oging himself hazely. Round and round went the bottle. They soon got to be very merryso much so that apparently they paid no attention to road or path, but went right through the woods and brush, the same as if they had been salking on a baru fluor.

At lergth, after winding about in various ways, and overcoming many obstacles, such route, they arrived at the patch and pitched over the inclosure. Ye Gods, what a sight dventurers could scarcely walk for them There lay great mealy "red cores," apparently calling out in their own language, " Arise, slash and cat!" They were none of your little, long, 'wizzed up" things, such as find their way to the market stands, and which one would suppose had fallen from the vice in a fit of the "blue devils," but they were plump, jolly, good natured fellows, many of which were already showing their red interior, having apparently, burst their sides with laughter. Ab was right in his glory, and so, had nog out his jack knife, he fell to slashing around with a v. ngeance. The others followed his example, and very soon there was and havor in the melon patch. Having satisfied his appetite, Ab set to stamping and crushing all that came in his way The other boys hesitated to participate at first. urging that it was really too bad to treat the old deacon in such a manner; but Ab swore that i was really good enough for the old hypocrite, and he would not leave as long as there was a melon with a whole hide.
