chambre de la toilette they were placed at different extremeties of it, with their backs turned to each other. There were two assistant executioners-one from Rouen, the other from Caen -besides him of Paris. These lost no time in preparing the convicts for the scaffold. During dreadful operation Orsini remained calm; and, though he was not so loud or contradictory as during his trial, Pierri was somewhat excited. The straight-waistooat interfered with his ges ticulations, but he hardly ceased talking for a moment. When the executioner was pinioning him he asked that the fastenings should not be drawn too tight, as he had no intention of escap The cold touch of the steel on his neck when the scissors cut off his hair, so as not to interfere with the guillotine, for an instant ap peared to thrill through him; but he recovered imself when he found that his beard was left untouched. He thanked the executioner for let ting him die with his face as became a man When the hood, to which the veil which covers the features of the parrioide is suspended, was put over his head, he is said to have laughed, and attempted a joke about the figure he must cut. At this moment he turned his hesd and perceived Orsini; he saluted him gaily, and asked how he was getting on He was inter rupted by Orsini, who was himself undergoing the same operation with the same sang frois as if he were under the hands of a valet dressing for a party, with the words, "Be calm, be calm, my friend" Pierri's tongue ran on, however. The assistant proceeded to strip him of his shoes, for in pursuance of the sentence they were to proceed to the scaffold barefooted. The man appeared to hesitate, but Pierri encouraged him to proceed, and assisted him as much as he could, still talking. The operation being over, and the toilette complete, he turned towards the turnkey, and asked to be allowed to embrace him. This request was complied with. The moment of moving now came, and the Abbe Hugon cried out "Courage!" "Oh! I am not afraid—I am not afraid," he said, "we are going to Calvary," and in a sort of feverish excitement he repeated to himself "Calvary, Calvary." Orsini was, on the other hand, as calm an tranquil as his fellow-convict was excited. He spoke little; but when the governor of the pri- | Try it and be convinced. son and some of the officers approached him, h bade them in a low tone of voice, farewell. The turnkey of his cell announced to him in a tone of regret that his last moment was come. Or-ini thanked him for his sympathy. His hair was also out away from his neck, but he underwent the operation without flinching. At the moment when the hood was put on his head, his face, which up to that moment was calm and impas-

The prison clock struck seven : before the last sound died away, the door leading to the scaffold opened as of itself. The Abbe Hugon entreated Pierri to profit by the few moments still left to ollect his thoughts, and assume a calmer attitude. He promised to be calm, and said he should chant a patriotic hymn; and it is said he actually began to sing the well known "Mourir pour la Patrie." Leaning on the Abbe Hugon, he mounted fifteen steps of the scaffold, still re-

Orsini was supported by the chaplain of the Conciergerie, and his calmness never deserted him for a moment. When he appeared on the platform it could be seen, from the movement of his body and of his head, though covered ries has escaped the attempts of assasins—did with the veil, that he was looking out for the crowd, and probably intended addressing them. But they were too far off. The greffier then directed the usher to read the sentence of the court, condemning the prisoners to the death of parricides. The usher, who was an old man, over sixty, was evidently much moved at having to peform this duty, and he trembled as much from emotion as from cold as he read the document, which no one listened to. After this formality was terminated, Orsini and pressed their lips on the crucifix offered to them. They then gave themselves up to the headsman Pierri was attached to the plank in an instant. He was executed first. The moment his veil was raised, and before his head was laid on the block, it is affirmed that he cried "Vive l'Italie-Vive

Orsini was then taken in hand. His veil was raised, and his countenance still betrayed no emotion. Before he was fastened to the plank he turned in the direction of the distant crowd, and, it is said, cried "Vive le France." It was but five minutes past seven when the second head fell into the basket. A cold shudder ran among those whose attention was fixed upon what was passing on the scaffold, and for an instant there was deep silence. It passed off, however, very soon. When all was over, men went to their work, and parties who had gone together to the spot from distant quarters of the town hastened home to breakfast. The morning was becoming clearer every moment. The troops began to move as if about to leave the ground. The guil lotine was lowered and taken off. The crowds gradually thinned; some few groups still lingered about the spot; but the cold was, bitter, and the snow began to fall, and in a few hours the place was deserted. The number of deaths from the attempt for which these wretched men suffered now amounts, I am assured, to fourteen I am just informed that de Rudio is to be sent to London to give evidence against Bernard.

Mr. Houston, of Texas, was opposed to makin the number of representatives a matter of favor Congress had no right to stretch the Constitution. Messrs. King, of New York, and Hale, of New Hampshire, expressed similar sentiments of oppos Mr. Bright argued that it was no infraction on th

Constitution to assume that a population of 250,000 required three representatives, without a caucus.

Mr. Muson, of Virginia, said that the Senate could not constitutionally decide who were elected. It would be an infringement on the prerogative of the House, which will possibly decide that the whole election is void. He wanted the vote received, so that the citizens of the country may see that this Government, although not seventy years old, is in a state of decrepitude and decay; that questions olitical expediency.

Mr. Green said that the number of representative are to be decided by the House alone.
