The idea of a mental effort, of OLLEY'S SALVE for sale wholeshe tasking the intellect, of compelling the thoughts to any subject that did not yield them perfect pleasure, was abborrent to him. Every pureuit JOHN HAFT, JR. hat can delight the mind be followed without ule or method, or caring whether in it he was. thoroughly successful, or moderately, or only a ittle. The moment it ceased to gratify, he disnissed it. _ Painting, postry, music, sculpture, anguages, philosophy, sciences, the drama, his-tory, to each did he more or less devote himself, coording to the pleasure it yielded. He was, to um up his character, au intellectual epicure. But on thicking over such a proceeding a tudying at a university, he reflected that, ac ording to the law of England, a few peculiariies in his mode of practicing the worship of our common religion prevented him from learning ogio, mathematics, and the like, at the public ducational institutions of his country-that, in onsequence, the only resource left him was to go over the borders to where, on a less enlightned principle, they consider learning a market. able commodity, and let any one have it who is willing to pay for it, and where, as a result to be expected from fire competition in the article, it to be had both at the cheapest rate and of the est quality. Warmly congratulating himself on this lucky lternative, Basil bade adieu to his happy and nind-illumined netive land, and, bataking himelf-to the benighted North, entered his name as student at one of those tag-rag and bob-tail astiutions, the Scotch universities ;--nay, after time, he was not ashamed even to give a small um for that ridiculous distinction, a Scotch deree-a thing for which all southern scholars how a becoming contempt by tacking to their 3. A., A. M., or M. D., the distinguished and ounding syllables, "oxon," or "CANTAB," as uch to evince the superior profundity of their equirements, and to intimate to the admiring ablic that they were lawfully qualified to im-ibe the same by conscientionaly breaking their ggs at the big end, and by other observances ually important and meritorious, as to let it be nown that they rank a little bigher than the ere Adam Smiths, and Watts, and Hunters, and broughams, of the North, with their simple neaking "LL. D.'s." They would flatter themlves that they are a step or two above that ! It may be stated that in Scotland students do ot reside within the university they attend, but re at liberty to find their dinners, their oms, or their society, when they can, how ey can, and where they can, as a soldier says s prayers; food for the mind being all the ourishment the colleges bargain to supply. In insequence. Basil, in his wanderings about the ty, having been struck with the breezy, se nestered quiet of the street alluded to, resolved establish himself here, and, having had his vorite books transmitted from England, conyed them to the house of a widow, by name Irs. Esterling, from whom he had hired apartliere he went on as before, giving all his hours octudy and the pursuits of taste. The classes he discuded as his fancy suggested, sometimes far verstretched the tasks there preacribed, somemes neglecting them altogether, as a more leasurable mental occupation, haply, presented tself. His abundant income he laid out on his est friends, his books, and on costiy farniture id materiel for study, or the exercise of taste. at even these, profuse as was his expenditure pon them, left a considerable surplus, which ound its way from his pocket here, at the uni-ersity, in manner analogous to what had been anal about his home. Many a poor but talented indent struggling to rise in life by the steep ad thoray path of intellectual acquirement, and it is a comforting thing to think there is a untry where learning's road from poverty to dependence and distinction, however difficult ad exhausting it he of itself, as Und knows it still it is not blocked by any face work of man's nstruction!)-many a one in these circumances, whose heart yearned for an additional lass for which his time was ample, but his funds, iserably as he stinted them, inadequate, would s surprised some day to receive, in a blank enlope, authenticated papers constituting him a tember of that class, nor in his joyous confusion ould for a moment imagine they came from that sold, distant Eoglish lad, who sat always alone, n't seemed so uninterested in anything He courted no society among the students, was ways civil and kind when spoken to, but apeared to shun any companionship. He strove or no premiums, sought no distinctions, nor did to appear to feel either admiration or envy for iose leading spirits whose rival displays of talent rew forth daily encomiums from the teachers nd bursts of noisy applause from their assombled fellow pupils. All these, as well as the fac-tions, cliques and intrigues, political, academi-cal, and of other descriptions, that surrounded him, he viewed with a calm, absent, indifference. HENEY H COLLINS At college he remained during the winter ses sion. In the spring, when most of the return to their homes, to prepare themselves by solitary study for the labors of the more advanced classes of next winter, he still continued in the same quarters, his residence been varied by amonth's midsummer tour in the mountainous parts of the D' and Galidreas' dattors, shoes, Gguns, etc., chenp, a country.
