It was part of these to keep a journal of the cases, recording the cause, progress, and daily changing symtoms of disease in each patient .-Every report was required to commence with a short account of the name, appearance, employ ment, &c., of the individual, and the circum stances that had preceded the injury or attack. The following narrative is founded upon one of such reports :--My apartments in the hospital were just over

As the cart came nearer, I could see in it, from where I sat, an individual laid along, covered with some bedelothes and canvas, and I immediately concluded it to be a patient—yet why one should come so strangely attended, rather excited my curiosity. I went out to make inquiries, and was informed by the corporal in charge that he was an illicit distiller recently apprehended, and had been passed on from some place in a distant part of the country to be conat class and reliable Figs.
