MY WIFE. Now the honey moon's over, Its joys are all past, And the troubles of married life Are on me at last. A month spent in roving All over the land, And a half a year's wages For the ring on her hand A good fifty thousand

Was her portion, I thought; But instead of the money She bringe h me nougat Her hair I thought auburn, It's redder then fire! O, if I but could Lay down and expire! I ne'er thought I ever Would come to this pass

And all through the doings Of a lass, O, alas! I know that I promised "To love and obey,"
And for the presents I gave her
"I promised to pay."

The house full of cousins, Of sisters and brothers; When in come upon us Both of her grandmothers. One would think that we had A meeting of the nations. What a nuisance, say I, Are these plaguey relations

Like the fisherman findeth His fish in the main.
She wake up some morning,
And find me in seine.

I thought I'd a damsol When I married, and well Sho was a dam sell.

THE CONTRABANDIST'S REVENGE

A CONFESSION.

[CONTINUED.] One of our housemaids-and the practice had been regular with a long succession of themwearied of my father's manner, left as soon as KLEBER HAVING JUST RETURN- she could with safety to her wages, and he immediately procured another in her stead. How or where the found her I never knew. I gave myself no concern; but the moment I saw her I formed a purposse, the guilt of which often rises up in my mind recriminatively when I lament at my destiny. She was very beautiful. I have many women in my restless lifetime, in many parts of the world, some of them celebrated; but certainly she was the most levely my eyes ever drank delight from looking on. I am convinced that any man whatever might have been his highest motive. his most enthisiastic pursuit, the instant her smile lighted on him, would have forsaken, forwould have been changed to love—his highest aspiration would have become to acquire the regard of ones a surpassingly attractive. She was Irish, and presessed of all the witchery of glanco heart subduing sweetness of manner, for which Some of our Canvas Roofs may be seen at ty was that of a Circe—tempting to evil: these

I have known what it is to be under the influence of those strongest hear presently; but in their most energetic action on my thoughts and feelings they were as nothing to the ardent, slavish love that bowed my spirit to the very dust before this woman. My father's money I lavishly bestowed upon her and her connections; and, as the books had fallen much behind through my neglect, -indispresition, as my father believed, -I found no lifficulty in establishing a cousin of hers, apparently a man of much souteness, in the counting house, as a chief clerk. This was a measure which she had used all her blandishments to ining manner, and humble, poverty stricken aspect. But this was a trifle to the sacrifices she required from me: my very religion I changed to gratify her. She was a Roman Catholic, and I must become one too. A whispered sentence, a smile, and a kiss, overturned all the arguments of Calvin, Knox, and Zwingle. This was not so important a matter on the score of conscience. for I had never paid any great attention to matters of faith: but what would my father thinkthe bigoted sectarian? Worse-what would he do? Though I had never borne for him much reverence, I tremt led vehemently when I renounced his creed, I new I was putting in jeopardy my very bread. It was therefore with the utmost secresy that I adopted and practiced my new form of religion. Shortly after this the priest to whom she brought me, performed a clandestine ceremony WHEESE .- 225 boxes prime W. R. cutting of marriage between us, when I had, after most vehement prayers and protestations, obtained from her a tardy consent. I thought that day the happiest of my life,—in very truth it was;

Such were the highest pleasures I had previously known: when I thought on them, and compared them with the distracting joy of altogether possessing Ellen Lucas, I laughed in worder and scora at them, and those that had shared them with me. I was intoxicated with my new delight; Halmost forsock the business; whilst my peculation upon my father's money became so extensive and systematic as to excite his fears and suspicions, though they as yet rested upon no particular individual. She was still staying as servant in the house.

In the meantime the man Ormond, her relation, tinued to rise higher and higher in my father's estimation. He was most devoted to his duty, regular in his habits, flatteringly attentive to the old man's whims and peculiarities-indeed, he was the very beau ideal of a faithful servant, and soon acquired the complete and absolute confidence of his master. Still, amid all this, my heart was haunted with continual doubts; my father must find out, sooner or later, my recent proceedings, and I trembled for the issue. I was altogether dependent upon him; not one morsel of bread could I earn by my own powers or resources. I knew should be a beggar; and she with whom I had want supplant the warmer affections. But now the thought cross in my mind-What, if my father should die?
