previous life had been such as to indicate a conhorited from him. But a striking particular was, that the whole business was in the uncontrolled hands of Mr. Ormond, into which also the proceeds were flowing. It was curicus to hear the opinions of people that knew us. My father's madness was admitted on all hands, as also my own ; indeed, I was given to understand that my proceedings had given considerable bias to the opinions of the doctors whose certificates had authorized his confinament. We were a pitied family, and Mr. Or-
