"But how am I to know anything of the kind?"

"My word, William; did it ever fail you? swear to you, as I shall answer to that Being whose eye alone saw the deed, that she is absolutely pure of it, whatever the evidence may appear to prove to you! Will you for my sake. use your utmost efforts to lead the jury to a ver dict of acquittal?" "This is really absurd, John."

"Then, I see, I must tell you the whole story. He rose, opened the doer, looked out, secured , returned, and commenced, in a low half-whisper, a narrative that speedily arrested and aborbed the attention of his hearer. When he had done, the latter heaved a deep igh, as if relieved from a weight. The expresion of feature with which he looked at him, too was altogether changed from that with which he had regarded him at his first entrance. "And now," said the stranger, "are you con rinced of her innocence?" "I am-I am."

"And you will endeavor to procure her acquit-"I will; I consider it a duty; and did I not balieve that your motive was not what the world would judge it, I would consider it also a duty to "Betray me, Will?"

"Give you up to public justice; but I could not do it. Alas! we have been friends from childhood! Your crime has been great and un natural-but you have trusted to my affection I will use all just measures to bring off your unhappy victim; your own punishment I will leave in the hands of Him who alone can inflict a pen lty adequate to such a deed." "Yes—you see it here:" and he snatched a quantity of hair from his head with his fingers nd held it out. It was iron-grey in color, and came away with ease, as if the roots had been withered, and yet his features were those of a very young manindeed, little beyond boyhood "Would you know the mark of Cain?" he con tinued: "look in my face. But what was Cain to me? He only slew his brother. Great God, what will become of me?"
