[From the Washington Union.] The Naval Monument. The following is an account of the monument at the Capitol, erected to the heroes who fell at Tripoli. It was written in 1813, by B. H. Latrobe Esq. The monument stood at that time in the Washington navyyard, facing the south

Laptain Porter, now commanding the Lasez. He was very much aided by the zeal of the Bishop of Florence, whose interest in the American cause arose not so much from the feelings of a Catholio ecclesiastic against the Infidels, as from an enlightened view of the pernicious effects of a system of a piracy, nursed by the policy of the European powers, to which America alone had dared to oppose the remedy of actual force. By the influence of the Bishop, Micali, of Leghorn, was induced to give the aid of his art on terms ex ceedingly moderate, that the original expense of the monument, which, at the usual rate of charge for sculpture would have cost twice as much did not quite reach $3,000. When finished, the blocks and figures were carefully packed up, and brought over in the Constitution frigate to Newport, R. I., from whence they were carefully packed up, and brought over in another vessel to Washington. In this circuitous voyage several of the blocks of the monument and many of the slabs composing the lower base, were broken, and it became necessary to substitute a base of freestone in its stead. On its arrival, it became a question where it should be created. The Capitol of the United States was pointed out | State about these days. Every thing is made as the proper place; but the unfinished state of that building and the size of the monument were objections. However, Congress was applied to, in the first place, for the sum of $1 000 to defray the expense of putting it up. Ohio State Journal manipulates the rank and The application though renewed in various shapes, proved altogether vain. The idea of placing it in the Capitol was of course given up, and the navy-yard, originally the most proper situation, was chosen. To defray the expenses of which could not be less than $800, a further subscription by officers of the navy was made, to which other citizens contributed.
