[From the London Family Horald.] The Stolen Casket of Jewels.

In the winter of 18-, while a conding the Nile with a Frenchman named Gardet, in pursuit of adventure, we had occasion to stop at the town of Ossiut. Cardet was a Frenchman by birth, and had been my companion for three years, through all my Asiatic wanderings; and a mutual attachment having arisen, he new considered himself an inseparable constituent of mine. He was a man shrewd by nature, of undaunted courage, but so garrulous that I never breathed to him my plans until they were ready for fulfilment. Of myself, all the reader need know is, that I had been traveling in Egypt and Asia; spoke the language fluently, and flattered myself that I understood Oriental manners and character pretty thoroughly.

As we always made it a point to pay our respects at head quarters, we at once went to see the Governor, Achmet Bey, a fine-looking Oriental, a Turk by birth, although, as he told us, a resident for twenty years of Egypt. We found him at his palace, about half a mile from the liver, seated on a divan of beautiful needle work, before which was one of the finest and most gargeous of Persian mats. On his right was a long nargileh. He rose as we entered; every attention dear inherent politeness could

It was a gift long promised me, and I prized it as my vari heard. I showed it to many persons, but opened it before few, least they should so cavy the contents as to steal it from me." "And what did the box contain so precious that you so carefully guarded it?" I asked. "That which I must valued," he replied, "was a signet ring, set with the most beautiful one ever beheld. There were also jewels of countless value; some of them I presented to my harem, but far more than I gave remained There was also the key to the saddle pocket, at which you were just now looking. What was mygone; stolen from beneath my head while I slept! And now," he continued, dropping hi for your shrewdness, (alluding to an occurrence at Cairo,) to discover the thief; if you try and But I know you will succeed; and i you do succeed, one third of the jewels you are the means of restoring to me shall be your Achmet rubbed his hand with delight, and already convertulation himself ou us bade me ask anything of him I needed.

"I want." I replied, "a permit to go any where I please through your town, and to enter any house through your demain; and, finally, that you say not a word to any one concerning He readily promised secrecy; he had been too much chagrined to mention it before, and gave me the paper I wanted. I told Gardet that I should remain in Ossiut for a few days, and requested him to leave with the bont at night for Upper Egypt, and remarked that I would overtake him on horseback in four or five days at the most. I further requested him to give out that I was on board, and to make any excuse he pleased for my non-appearance. I rejoiced room from which the safe was stolen. It was in the second story, and could be reached only by passing through two smaller chambers. Having reached it. I desired to be left alone; and now began a survey.

The room was sixteen feet square-on the east and west sides there were no openings. The walls were wattied, and hang with red tapestry : the wall. The ceiling was composed of beams, lowing words: on the upper side of which planks were fasten. ed. There was apparently no opening communighting with the left above. A lounge, covered with damask, occupied one portion of the room, while ottomans of various patterns were deposited in the corner. On the north side was the door of entrance. This I examined carefully. and found upon the wooden bolt, which could be drawn only from within, no mark of violence, the apartment were two windows-small, it is true, but still of size sufficient to admit the ingress of an ordinary sized man. One was latticed-the other had the lattice removed. I examined both the sills -there was no rubbing of the paint, and no sand remaining which could have been brought there by the foot of an in examined. It was of red and blue tile, and appeared solid throughout; there were no marks of footstops upon it; and in some places the dust halaceumulated undisturbed. I now descended and was met by Achmet. I put on an expression of intelligence, but declined conversation; and to his question, "Any trace yet?" I simply replied, "Wait! Allah will not let wickedness go unpunished."

It was now nearly duck, yet I began to reconpoitre the exterior of the palace. It was of an oblong form, and its greatest length was from There was but one tree very near it, and that was a gigantic palm, which towered twice the height of the palace, at about a yard's distance from its walls. I next examined the windows of the chamber from below. There was a blank wall to their very allis. then searched the ground for indications of th was of a ladder, and in so doing found the marks of feet. There was a deep independion, as from a jump, beneath the window, which had no case to the village. But in these wasks there was no necolierity, which was particularly observable from the inner roll; all the heel prints were dark, and I resultive I the palace. Next, to the question, 'How did he enter?" I argued after this manner: He assuredly did not get in away from it, then as the heels were deepest, he nut have taken those steps brokward, to mis lead any observer from his true mode of exit; and he made the connterseit of a leap, to further that impression; coge, he must have been a cun-

But one other suggestion There was no place for concealment, except behind the tapestry, and this, as previously as to make the hiding of a man impossible. I now summed up the result in these few worde: The box was stolen by a cuening fellow; be entered by the roof, and probably departed by the same way; the thief must be of the higher rank. After which conclusions I dismissed all further thought from my mind and slept. [CONCLUSION IN OUR NEXT.]

Indeed, we think it scarcely requires an argument to prove that the Alderman possesses all the Magisterial powers of the Mavor. He is ex cofficie a Justice of the Peace, and i empowered to perform all the functions which the laws devolve upon that office.

Previous to 1833, the law required that the Mayor of the City should be elected from among the Aldermen, and up to that time the powers of the Aldermen in all cases of summary conviction under either acts of assembly or ordinances, were undoubted and undisputed. The fact that the Mayor is now elected from the citizens at large, certainly does not detract from the duties and powers of the Aldermen. Until that time the Aldermen had "all the jurisdictive powers and authorities of Justice of the Peace and Justices of over and terminer and jail delivery." On the 10th of May, 1817, previous
