CHOKING TO DEATH. It appears that we are to have again, in few weeks, one or more terrible scenes enacted on the scaffold in the county jail. However deserving of death the criminals may have been-the incidental part of it-the examples lately exhibited have not, as it happens, diminished the numbers of victims by slungshot and knife. Several murderers have since escaped from any, even a secondary, punishment. Yet in the face of all these escapes, a vast amount of piety and patent the ology is still poured forth from the press and pulpit to sustain the choking process as a
