BRIA IRON WORKS. In mineral wealth, Pennsylvania is withou a rival among her sister States. Extensive in variety, superior in quality as are the beds of coal, iron, and limestone found within her borders, they constitute an exhaustless source of wealth and prosperity for the people of the State. Their developments and productive usefulness forms a sure basis and permanent supply for the employment of labor and industry, in all the wealth producing pursuits of agriculture, commerce, and manufacturing The true source of national wealth, consists in the active industry and well paid labor of the great masses of the people. Great Britian is an eminent example of the effects of an abundant supply of coal and iron in building up national power and increasing national wealth. Coal is the food, and iron is the muscle of her vast and varied manufacturing in dustry. The employment and support of the millions of her population is mainly de pendent upon these two great staples. The steam engines which spin and weave, and hammer, and blow, and pump, and lift, and travel the railroads and the river, and the ocean, are fed and kept in motion by her coal, which, also furnishes the fuel for her furnaces, forges, and vast workshops, almost innumerable in all the branches of the mechanic arts. Her iron supplies not only her own enormous consumption, but affords a surplus for exportation to other countries. Coal and iron are the two chief elements of the greatness of England.

Pennsylvania is nearly as large as all England, and her natural advantages are far greater. There is nothing in the world which surpasses the rich ore and coal beds of our State. The world holds no such mines of ore and coal as those of Pennsylvania. In order to produce an effect upon our State like that produced in England from its coal and iron, it must be developed, and for this end nothing is requisite but a proper encouragement of manufactures, the judicious employment of to that of England, not only in extent, but also in its agricultural and manufacturing capacities, and with proper encouragement and attention, its products might rival hers. It is obvious, from all the indications of the financial condition of the public treasury, that necessity will soon compel an adjust ment of the present tariff, and in Pennsylvania, men of all political opinions agree that the revenue, necessary for the administration of government, should be raised by the imposition of duties upon foreign imports; and in laying them, such discriminating protection should be afforded as will justly and judiciously protect American labor. Much of the land is yet covered with dark forests of pine, river rises by several branches, on the westorn slope of the Allegheny, and flows westward across the county. Bituminous coal, iron ore and limestone, are found in great abundande through most parts of the county. It is scarcely fifteen years since a commences ment was made in the development of the ich mineral resources of this county. In 1843, the coal was only mined for domestic consumption, and the iron ore had not yet been worked. A statistical writer, in speakng of Cambria in that year, remarks that the productions of the county are not imbeen wrought in these few short years in the wealth and productiveness of Cambria, by the introduction of enterprise, capital and labor among those hills teeming with value!

In 1843, the value of property, real and personal, assessed for county purposes, was $752.316. The whole then county valuation is now more than doubled by the capital invested in a single establishment for manufacturing-the works of the Cambria Iron Com-

This town, at the junction of the Conemaugh and Stony Creek, was "a place of considerable business," as the western terminus of profit is so small that the imported article of the Allegheny Portage Railroad and the brought to New Orleans, either as ballast or commencement of the navigation on the western division of the Pennsylvania Canal, but it was the Pennsylvania Railroad which has given it a position among the chief inland towns of Pennsylvania.
