

IMPORTANT SUMMARY OF FRENCH NEWS.

The Grampus has brought Paris dates to the 2d of March, about 20 days later than before received. Though broken & exaggerated, the accounts are highly interesting.

Having no allied accounts--- several of Bonaparte's official letters being evidently missing; and his dispatches, as well as events, shewing what small credence can be given to Paris "we hears;" we have not the best materials for forming a correct summary---From such as we have, we collect the following.

After the battle of Brienne, February 1 and the retreat of Napoleon to Troyes, the allies made a bold but desultory effort to obtain possession of Paris, by advancing at a rapid step on several routes at the same time.

The right under Blucher, &c. took the road by Sazane, Montmiril, Meaux &c. and its front was near the latter---about 31 miles N. E. of Paris. A light corps under Wimpfingerode, covered Blucher's right, and took Soissons by assault.

The centre under Wittgenstein, occupied Troyes, the 7th February drove the French to Nogent, on the Seine and had its advance at Nangis, 42 miles from Paris.

The left took the road from Troyes Sens---united with the detachment from Auxerre---drove the French from Maret and occupied Fontainebleau. The left of this column was covered with a body of Cossacks and light troops under Platoff, who took Nemours and spread themselves as far as Orleans. This was the situation we think, of the allies about the 10th or 12th of February.

Bonaparte left Troyes about the 6th February for Nogent; retired from thence the 8th, and collected a force between Meaux and Montmiril---fell upon the advance and afterwards on the main body of Blucher's wing, and evidently obtained advantages which compelled that wing to retreat to Etoges, within 22 miles of Chalons. We have no French official statement of these successes; but they occasioned great rejoicing throughout France; and the reports of them represented them as very important. They say Gen. D'York was mortally wounded in one of them.

Bonaparte then proceeded with great celerity to attack the allied centre at Nangis. This column had been successful in driving the French from Nogent, and compelling Victor and Oudinot to retreat beyond Nangis. On the 17th the French attacked Nangis, Mormans, &c.; and the official French accounts represents the defeat of the allied column here to have been complete---having lost 6,000 prisoners, 16 cannon, and 10,000 musquets; and that general Wittgenstein escap'd by retreating in great haste to Nogent. A corps of his column under general Bianchi, defeated a French division general Chateru, at Montreal. But other French divisions coming up from Nangis, led by the emperor in person Bianchi was beaten and compelled to pass the Seine, towards Troyes, with the loss as Bonaparte says, of 6000 prisoners, six cannon and four flags.

We have no account of the occurrences of the left wing of the allies, after its front had reached Fontainebleau. A Paris note of March 1, says 'Sens was taken by assault the 11th of February after a siege of twelve days.' If taken by the French it is extraordinary that the news of it should not have reached Paris until 18 days after---unless the allies were between that city and Paris! But the French official accounts state, that the allies had retreated from Fontainebleau and Nemours, and that the whole allied army were retiring on Troyes, &c.

The last of Bonaparte's officials dated, Troyes, the 27th of Feb. where his H. Q. then were, and had been from the 24th. Oudinot, with a strong corps had advanced to Bur-sur-Aube, and Macdonald had his advanced guard at Chatillon, the late seat of the Congress. He makes no mention either of the main allied army or the Congress.

But this letter states that the wrecks of Blucher, Sacken D'York and Kleist's corps were manœuvring to entrap Marmont, who was at la Forte Goucher, which is not more than 45 miles from Paris! and tho' the emperor on the 27th states that marshals Ney, Victor and Arrichi were at Arci, Planci, & Nogent, treading on Blucher's heels, yet a Paris note of March 2d (the latest) says, Marmont has taken an advantageous position at Lacy, which is ten miles higher Paris than la Forte Goucher! We confess we know not how to solve this riddle.

We have not received Bonaparte's letter of the 24th of Feb; but a Paris article gives an extract from it which says, that officers from the French, Russian, Austrian, and Prussian armies had met at Lusigny, near Troyes to treat for an armistice. The inactivity of Napoleon at Troyes may probably thus be accounted for. But no mention of the progress of his negotiation is made in his last letter,

The declaration of war by Murat king of Naples, against France, is confirmed. The viceroy had gained some reported successes in Italy; but he had been compelled to retreat from Verona, where our accounts left him. The news from the southwest of France is important, Lord Wellington defeated Soult on the 28th Feb. at Ortes, and was advancing on Bordeaux. The Perfect in that city proclaimed, on the 4th March, that he had invaded the department of Les Landes, and was approaching Ginonde. The utmost consternation and alarm prevailed at Bordeaux. This is a bird-eye view of the late French accounts--- That they allies had been obliged to retreat a considerable distance; and that the had much hard fighting, are certain: But nothing had occurred, by these accounts decisive of the event of the campaign. We must wait the allied accounts to form a fair judgment on the subject.

Gen. Gerard has set out from the bridge of Guillotiere, supported by the duke of reggio--- marches towards Susigni, and has passed the Barse. Gen. Duhesme has taken position at Montieramay near Vancœver.

About 6000 Cossacks, commanded by the Hotman Platow, repassed here in the evening of the 20th, and all night retreating precisely upon Villeneuve sur Yonne. They have experienced in the course of their excursion towards Orleans and Fontainebleau, great losses. Unfortunately their visit has spread desolation through all the places they have passed. The country is wholly ravaged by them---our little town has been greatly pillaged. In fact our misfortunes are incalculable.

Lyons, Feb. 27.

The face of every thing was changed since the arrival of the 11,000 men detached from the army of Catalonia, it is impossible to describe the beauty, the carriage, the adour of those brave men. They are all veterans, whiskered, strong, vigorous, and burning for the conflict---They have been received with transports which redouble their desire of seeing the enemy.

The Prince Regent has caused his acknowledgments to be presented to the officers and soldiers who contended against gen. Wilkinson's army at Cornwall, Canada, last fall.
