

POETRY.

THE END OF ALL.

IN youth, how blithe, how sweet and gay,
Life's smiling face appears;
Our pleasures drive and we obey,
Nor think of changing years.
In every flowery path we rove,
Nor spurn the giddy call,
Till thus reminded from above,
That death's "the end of all."

Love glides within the breast,
With sweet seducing aim:
The dear idea is caressed,
And blows into a flame.
But age will mark the furrow'd cheek
The genius too will fall;
The faltering tongue will faintly speak
Is this "THE END OF ALL."

The syren call of pleasure draws,
With merciless control;
While vanity invites applause,
Ambition warms the soul,
But if pale sickness peep abroad,
Such comforts are but small;
The sweets of life increase the lead,
Such is "the end of all."

The glare of riches charm the sense,
And honor's pulse beat high!
The serious thought is driven hence,
And shadowy phantoms fly,
While reason yields to slavish fear,
This thought will taste like gall;
Perhaps the next revolving year,
May mark "the end of all."

O blend those fascinating joys
With those of higher fame:
Let gratitude's melodious voice,
Call on his Maker's name.
Religion will her charms display,
And smiles will meet the call;
Terror will yield to hope's bright ray
Which gilds "the end of all."

LYING.

Nothing is more criminal, mean or ridiculous, than lying. It is the production either of malice, cowardice, or vanity; but it generally misses of its aim in every one of these respects; for lies are always detected sooner or later. If we advance a malicious lie, in order to effect any man's fortune or character, we may, indeed injure him for some time; but we shall certainly be the greatest sufferers in the end: for as soon as we are detected, we are blasted for the infamous attempt; and whatever is said afterwards to the disadvantage of that person, however true, passes for calumny. To lie, or to equivocate, which is the same thing, to excuse ourselves for what we have said or done, and to avoid the danger of the shame that we apprehend from it, discovers our fear as well as our falsehood; & we only increase, instead of avoiding the danger and shame; we shew ourselves to be the lowest and meanest of mankind, and are sure to be always treated as such. If we have the misfortune to be in the wrong, there is something noble in frankly owning it; it is the only way of atoning for it, and the only way to be forgiven. To remove a present danger, by equivocating, evading or shuffling, is sometimes so despicable, and betrays so much fear, that whosoever practices them deserves to be chastised. There is another sort of lies which, tho' inoffensive are wonderfully ridiculous; those, for example, which a mistaken vanity suggests, that defeat the very end for which they are calculated. These are chiefly narrative and historical lies, all intended to do infinite honor to their author. He is always the hero of his own romances; he has been in dangers which nobody but himself ever escaped; he has beheld with his own eyes, whatever other people have heard or read of; and has ridden more miles post in one day, than ever a courier went in two. He is presently discovered, and soon becomes the object of contempt and ridicule.

Nothing but truth can carry us through the world, with either our conscience or our honour unwounded. It is not only our duty, but our interest; as a proof of which, it might be observed, that the greatest fools are the greatest liars. We may safely judge of a man's truth, by his degree of understanding.

ANECDOTES.

A certain Hybernian lady had a custom of saying to a favorite little dog, to make him follow her. "Come along sir." A would be witty gentleman stepped up to her one day, and accosted her with—"Is it me, Madam, you called?" "Oh, no sir," said she, with great composure, "It was ANOTHER PUPPY I spoke to."

A gentleman not much versed in literary affair, asked a Hybernian friend, what was the meaning of posthumous works. "Oh," exclaimed PAT, "dont you know that? why they are books which a man writes after he is dead."

A. VANDYKE,

RESPECTFULLY informs his friends and the public in general, that he has commenced the Saddle and Harness Making business in the borough of Bellefonte, at the corner of Market and Main streets, immediately opposite Mr. Alexander's tavern. He flatters himself from an attention to business, and the superior quality of his work, to merit a share in the public patronage.
