

Popular Song.

MY OLD KENTUCKY HOME.

AS SUNG BY "SAMPSON'S OPERA TROUPE."

The sun shines bright in the old Kentucky home, 'Tis summer, the darkies are gay. The corn tops ripe, an' the meadows are in bloom. While the birds make music all the day. The young folks roll on the little cabin floor. All merry, all happy and bright. Bye an' bye, Hard Times comes a knocking at the door. Then, my old Kentucky home, good night!

What is more contemptible than a scandal monger? What is more to be dreaded than the spirit of mean, low gossip that pervades too many hearts?

There is a class of meddlers in the world who mind everybody's business but their own. Instead of endeavoring to discover the good traits in a person's character, they seek with the utmost diligence for the evil. When a neighbor or acquaintance falls into an error, they do not administer a reproof in that Christian like manner recommended in the Bible.

On the contrary, these gossips constitute themselves reporters-in-chief of all misdeeds which come under their watchful eyes. Every word, look and deed, however trivial, is magnified by the brazen tongue of rumor, till it is a difficult task to ascertain the truth.

We can have no confidence in those who would rehearse us long stories about the faults and follies of others, for we believe, and with reason, too, that we have no hope of escape. The sincerest nature is, by their misrepresentation, made to seem artful and designing; truth is distorted into falsehood, and religion into a mere pretence. They are always wondering why people choose certain courses in life, and why they entertain views opposite to their own. They are constantly on the alert that they may be duly apprised of the movements of those around them.

Does Mrs. Heine, the rich lady across the way, purchase a common silk for a walking dress, rather than a brocade, they give it as their opinion, that she can no longer waste so much in extravagance, and that some ominous reverses threatened to bring her down to a level with them.

Does the poor school mistress leave her situation on account of failing health, they come to the sage conclusion, that though she has the plea of illness for an excuse, they believe the committee saw that she had been there long enough.

Does Deacon Moreton send his handsome and intelligent son to a distant seminary, they declare in council that, without doubt, the young man was so wild and reckless his father was obliged to send him to the country.

Does the millionaire, whose princely home excites their envy, decide to take his whole family on a family tour to Niagara and the lakes, they surmise that this is a plan to conceal the chagrin of the eldest daughter, because she could not secure that English nobleman for her husband.

But this is not all; their suspicions and reports are not always so harmless. They sever hearts that have loved and trusted; plant discord and strife where the dove of peace should fold its white wings; and make enemies of those who have once been friends. Dear reader, from such gossips may you and we be saved.—N. Y. Wide Awake.

Sleigh-Riding with a Widow.

Snow had fallen, the young of the village got up a grand sleighing party to a country tavern at some distance, and the interesting Widow Lambkin sat in the same sleigh, in the same seat, and under the same buffalo, as myself.

"Oh! don't!" she exclaimed, as we came to the first bridge, catching me by the arm, and turning her veiled face towards me, while her little eyes twinkled through the moonlight.

"Don't what?" I asked.

"Oh! now don't she repeated supplicatingly. 'I'm not doing anything,' said I, rather confusedly.

"Well, but I thought you were going to take toll," replied she.

"Toll?" replied I, "what's that?" (wasn't I green?)

"Mr. Meadows pretends he don't know what toll is!" Exclaimed the widow, her clear laugh ringing above the music of the bells.

"Indeed, I don't then," I said laughing in turn.

"Don't know that the gentlemen, when they go on a sleighing party, claim a kiss as toll when they cross a bridge?"

"Well, I never!"

When next we came to a bridge I claimed toll; the struggle of the widow to hold the veil was not sufficient to tear it, and, somehow, when the veil was removed, her face was turned directly towards my own, and, in the glittering of the moon-light, the horse trotted on himself, toll was taken for the first time in his life by Dr Meadows.

Soon we came to a long bridge, but the widow said it was no use to resist, and she paid up without a struggle.

"But you won't take toll for every arch, will you, Doctor?"

The only reply was a practical affirmative to the question.

Did you ever sleigh-ride with a widow, and take toll at bridges?

The Heroic Miner.

A poor but pious miner in Cornwall, was down deep in the earth with another miner sinking a shaft. They were blasting rocks, and their custom was, after the rock was charged, for one first to ascend in the bucket, and the other to wait until the bucket came down again, then ignite the fuse, get into the bucket, give the signal to the man above, and be drawn to the top before the explosion. In the present case, the train unexpectedly took fire. The fuse was hissing, both men rushed to the bucket, got in and gave the signal to hoist; but the man above could not draw them both. They at once saw their danger; both could not escape, and delay was death. One of the miners was pious. Looking for a moment at his companion and stepping from the bucket, he said, "Escape for thy life in a few moments I shall be in heaven." The bucket was dropped, and the man was safe.

Eager to know the fate of his magnanimous companion, he bent over the mouth of the shaft. Just then the explosion rumbled below, and a splinter struck him on the brow, leaving a mark he will carry to the grave.

They soon commenced laboring among the fallen rocks to extricate the corps. At last they heard a voice. Their friend was yet alive. They reached him and found him without injury or scratch. All that he could tell of the fearful scene was, that the moment his friend was gone, he sat down and took up a stone and held it before his face. When asked what induced him to let his companion escape, he replied, "I believed my soul to be safer; I was not so sure of his."

Now look at him who, to build a city called by his own name, sacrificed a hundred thousand men, and at this poor miner, who, to save the soul of his unconverted comrade, sat down there to be blasted to pieces, and say which is the true hero.

Irish Anecdotes.

Some years ago, when the beautiful painting of Adam and Eve was exhibited in Ireland, it became the chief topic of conversation. Finally, a poor, illiterate peasant went to see it. The light was so arranged as to reflect on the picture, and to leave the spectator in darkness. The peasant, as he entered the room to see his first parents, was struck with so much astonishment, that he remained speechless for some moments. He stood like a statue, and as though his feet were incorporated with the oaken floor of the room. At last, with an effort he turned round to his acquaintance and said:

"Barney, I'll never say another word against Adam in all my life, for if I had been in the garden I would have ate ivy apple in it for the sake of such a lovely crater as Eve."

Printer's Proverbs.

Never inquire thou of the editor, the news, for behold it is his duty at the appointed time to give it into thee without asking.

When thou dost write for his paper, never say unto him, "What thinkest thou of my piece?" for it may be that the truth would offend thee.

It is not fit that thou shouldst ask him who is the author of any article, for his duty requires him to keep such things to himself.

When thou dost enter into his office, take heed unto thyself that thou dost not look at what may be lying open; for that is not meet in the sight of good breeding. Neither examine thou the proof sheet; for it is not ready to meet thine eye, that thou mayest understand it.

The Mother.

It has been truly said: "The first being that rushes to the recollection of a soldier or a sailor, in his heart's difficulty, is his mother. She clings to his memory and affection, in the midst of all the forgetfulness and hardihood induced by a roving life. The last message he leaves is for her, his last whisper breathes her name. The mother, as she instills the lessons of piety and filial obligation into the heart of her infant son, should always feel that her labor is not in vain. She may drop into the grave. But she has left behind her influence that will work for her. The bow is broken, but the arrow is sped and will do its office."

Curious Custom.—The causes for which a Mahometan woman may ask a divorce are clearly laid down in Koran; and her evidence is sufficient, because the Mahometan law supposes that a woman must be violently aggrieved before the modesty of her sex will allow her to appear in public with such an application. So careful is the law to spare her feelings, that she is not required to recount her injuries, unless of her own free will; all she has to do is to place her slippers reversed, that is with the sole upward, before the Cadi and the case is finished; the divorce is granted without further inquiry.

The Chantique Democrat tells a pretty good story concerning the Post Office in the town of Westfield:

A letter was put into the box, the appearance of which denoted that the writer was unused to the use of stamps, and had failed to make one stick at all. He had tried vainly and tried, but the inveterate portrait of Franklin would curl up. At last, in despair he pinned it to the envelope, and wrote just under it—

"Paid, if the d—d thing sticks!"

"Oh, my dear sir, how are you? How is your smart? Folks well to home? Why you look smart as a youngster—you enjoy excellent health, eh?"

"Why, tolerable good sir, but I beg pardon, you have the advantage of me."

"How so?"

"Why really sir, I don't know you."

"Nor I you. So where's the advantage?"

"How beautiful are the smiles of innocence, how endearing the sympathies of love, how sweet the solace of friendship, how lovely the tears of affection. These combined are all characteristic in woman. They are the true trophy of humanity, rich pearls clustering around the altar of domestic happiness."

Nothing is more easy than to grow rich. It is only to trust nobody, befriend no one, to heap interest upon cent; to destroy all the finer feelings of nature, and be rendered mean, miserable and despised some twenty or thirty years, and riches will come as sure as disease, disappointment, and a miserable death.—Pau-ding.

There is nothing purer than honesty; nothing sweeter than charity; nothing warmer than love; nothing brighter than virtue; and nothing more steadfast than faith. These united in one mind, form the purest, the sweetest, the richest, brightest, holiest, and most steadfast happiness.

When people are fit for nothing else, they look to the interest of their country. Men will doubt their fitness to open a broker's shop, peddle clams, or act as switch tender on a railroad; but whoever saw the individual who distrusted his ability to take charge of a custom house, or fill a foreign embassy? We pause for a response.

Each day some pearl drops from the jeweled thread of friendship; some lyre to which we have been wont to listen, has been hushed forever. But wise is he who mourns not the pearl and music lost, for life with him shall pass away gently as an eastern shadow from the hills, and death be a triumph and a gain.

A very modest lady sent her very modest daughter, a pretty young damsel, out one morning for some articles. Among the many, she informed a clerk in one of our stores, that her mother wanted to get three yards of cloth, for primitive triangular appendages for her baby."

"Dear sir," lisped a great lady, in a watered silk, at the world's Fair, "have the goodness to inform me if there are noblemen in the United States?"

"Yes, am," answered a full-fledged Jonathan, "if an one of them."

"Do you keep matches," asked a wag of a retailer.

"Yes, all kinds," was the reply.

"Well then I'll take a trotting match."

The retailer immediately handed him a box of Dr. Braddeth's Pills.

"The lady who did not think it respectful to bring up her children to work has lately heard from two sons. One of them is barker on a flat-boat and the other is steward of a brick-yard."

"Keep your dog away from me," said a dandy to a butcher boy.

"Darn the dog," said the boy, "he will be after your puppies."

"Do you like novels?" said a city girl to her Buckeye beau.

"I don't know," said he, "for I never eat any but I'm some of your possum."

HOOBOO!—The following jubilant dispatch recently passed over the wires between Albany and a neighboring city.—"To Mr. St. Albany. Dear Jim—Another boy. Hooray!"

"I feel for you," as the pick-pocket's fingers said to his neighbor's watch.

"If all the world were blind what a melancholy sight it would be," said an Irishman.
