THE BAFTSMAN'S JOUBUAL.

When lovers are wooing and cooing, Pursuing some woman for wife, Nought is thought of the storm that is brewing, To bring cloudy weather for life: But those who have gathered the flowers From the footiall of Cupid that spring, Know there grow in Hymeneal bowers, Thorns, nettles and briars that sling.

He Avears never wooer was truer : She yours she allows not a beau To be near, or appear as ought to her. Save one that she slightly m y know; But those who are by when they sigh, And such little perjuries make, Can't conceive how these lovers can lie-Under such heavy mists of mistake.

Their style of exclusive devotion Is all very well in its way, But this very unsociable notion They find, after marriage, "don't pay." "My darling" will last for a while-For a while be at intervals kissed; But though parted by many a mile. It is rarely that Madam is Miss-ed.

This "paying addresses" possesses A charm, as each lover allows; But repeatedly paying for dresses Must follow Hymenial yows. Though Cupil the office conceals, That each hapless sufferer fills, Fet llymen, more honest, reveals His dely of "paying up" bills

The Paralise promised by Cupid, With chern's as guardian sprights, Is rentered remarkably slapid. To those who must sleep there o' nights. These cherubs must all of them cut. Though the fact is a lover beneath; And his "heaven below" is replete With wailing and outting of teeth.

But a lover will never discover A fault in the one he would wed. From his dream never seems to recover Till his limb to the alter is led. His ilol then proves an ideal-Still worship he possibly can-Ye', though he my love what is real. You'l' atlow he's an altar-ed man.
