from the darkness of the night, or the intricacy of the muffling, took a most unmerciful time to accomplish.

"We shall never find the hotel at this hour," said Sir Peter angrily.

"The house will certainly be closed," chimed in the young ladies.

" Take you five to two on the double event,' replied Jack, slapping the alderman on the shoulder, and preparing to book the wager. I did not wait to see it accepted, but stepped over the side, and trudged along the "Boomjes," that long quay, with its tall elm trees, under whose shade many a burgomaster has strolled at eve, musing over the profits which his last venture from Batavia was to realize; and then having crossed the narrow bridge at the end, I traversed the Erasmus platz, and rang boldly, as an old acquaintance has a right to do, at the closed door of the "Schwein Kopf." My summons was not long unanswered, and followed the many-petticoated handmaiden along the well-sanded passage, I asked, "Is the Holbein chamber unoccupied ?" while I drew forth a florin from my purse.

"Ah, Mynheer knows it then," said she, smiling. "It is at your service. We have had no travelers for some days past, and you are aware that, except greatly crowded, we never open it."

This I knew well; and having assured her that I was an habitue of the Schwein Kopf, in times long past, I persuaded her to fetch some dry wood and make me a cheerful fire, which, with a krug of scheidam and some canastre. made me as happy as a king.

The "Holbeiner Kammer" owes its name. and any repute that it enjoys, to a strange quaint portrait of that master seated at a fire. with a fair headed handsome child sitting crosslegged on the hearth before him. A certain half resemblance seems to run through both faces, although the age and coloring are so different. But the same contemplative expression, the deep-set eye, the massive forehead and pointed chin, are to be seen in the child as in the man.

This was Holbein and his nephew, Franz von Holbein, who in after years served with distinction in the army of Louis Quatorze. The back-ground of the picture represents a room exactly like the chamber-a few highly-carved oak chairs, the Utrecht velvet backs glowing with their scarlet brilliancy, an old-fashioned Flemish bed, with groups of angels, Neptunes, bacchanals, and dolphins, all mixed up confusedly in quaint carving ; and a massive frame to a very small looking-glass, which hung in a leaning attitude over the fire-place, and made me think, as I gazed at it, that the plane of the room was on an angle of sixty-five, and that the least shove would send me clean into the stove.

"Mynheer wants nothing," said the prow with a court'sey.

"Nothing," said I, with my most polite bow.

"Good night, then," said she; "scklaff

"How droll he should never have told me where he lives !" said he, aloud, as the bystanders crowded about him, and showered questions upon him.

"It is Monsieur le Ministre, man-M. de Louvois himself, whose life you've saved .-Your fortune is made for ever."

The speech was a true one. Before three months from that eventful day, M. de Louvois, who had observed and noted down certain traits of acuteness in Frank's character, sent for him to his bureau.

"Rolbein," said he, "I have seldom been deceived in my opinion of men. You can be secret, I think ?"

Frank placed his hand upon his breast, and bowed in silence.

" Take the dress you will find on that chair; a carriage is now ready waiting in the court yard; get into it, and set out for Bale. On your arrival there, which will be-mark me well-about eight o'clock on the morning of Thursday, you'll leave the carriage, and send it into the town, while you must station yourself on the bridge over the Rhine, and take an exact date of everything that occurs, and every one that passes, till the cathedral clock strikes three. Then the caleche will be in readiness for your return; and lose not a moment in repairing to Paris."

It was an hour beyond midnight, in the early part of the following week, that a caleche, travel-stained and dirty, drove into the court of the minister's hotel, and five minutes after, Frank, wearied and exhausted, was ushered into M. de Louvois' presence.

"Well, monsieur," said he impatiently, "what have you seen ?"

"Ten .- A lievely servant from Bale rides by, with a basket. An old peasant in a yellow doublet____"

"Ay, what of him ?"

"Nothing remarkable, save that he leans over the rails, and strikes three blows with his stick upon them."

"Enough, enough," said M. de Louvois, gayly. "I must awake the king at once." The minister disappeared, leaving Frank in a state of bewilderment. In less than a quarter of an hour he entered the chamber, his face covered with smiles.
