BONNIE KITTIE.

BY W. W. POSBICK. When the sunlight kissed the mountain, Bonnie Kittie came to bring Silver water from the fountain, Where the water-crosses spring, Shrinking from my love's caresses, Loose her raven ringlets drooped. And the streamlet caught her trasses,

As she blushed but smiling stooped-

"Kittie!" eried I, "hear thy lover!" But the laughing maiden fied To the cettage, through the clover With its nodding blossoms red-"Wanton Willie, cease to tarry." Said she, as her black eyes smiled, Bonnie Kittie may not marry.

Mother needs her darling child." Kittle's eyes are drowned in sorrow, From her cheek the rose has fled; For that mother on the morrow,

In the valley found a bed! Round her green couch friends are weeping, Oh, 'twas sad to see them part! Through the hand that I am keeping

I can feel her beating heart ! Like the night that leaves the mountain. When the gloom is turned to gold, Once again beside the fountain. Bonnie Kittie I enfold;

There I spoke my love's beguiting, But she answered not my strain; But upon my breast wept, smiling Like the roses after rain!

From Cape May .-- Bathing Scenes. Extract from the Cape May correspondent of the Baltimore American:

"The bathing ground at eleven o'clock in the morning resembles an immense masquerade, as it is difficult to distinguish males from females, so perfect is the transformation made by the variegated dresses. Husbands can scarcely recognise their wives when they join them in the water, or children their parents; the consequence is their is a general freedom from restraint, and all participate in the enjoyment with an adaudon that contributes greatly to the pleasures of the auri. The ladies are mostly accompanied by gentlemen. who steady them in the breakers, though many of them seem, to be more able to stand the ocean's rudeness than their male companions. They are generally the first in the water and the last to leave it.

"I' witnessed vesterday morning several sick persons, who were carried into the surf and held in the arms of their servants, being apparently unable to stand or walk. One old gentleman, suffering with the rheumatics, was carried down to the beach, accompanied by a servant with spade in hand, who buried his bloom, not a crease in her brilliant robe, nor limbs in the salt sand, just inside of the breakers, where he lay for nearly an hour, with an umbrella over his head being unable to stand the fury of the rushing waters. There were also a number of parents at an early hour in the morning with infant children, whom they took out in the surf in their arms, and the little ones seemed to enjoy it vastly. On the surf in front of the Atlantic and Columbia, there could not have been less than three hundred children under nine years of ago, rolling about on the beach inside of the breakers, mostly dressed in red, green or blue drawers, with jaunty straw hats, gaily trimmed with red flannel, adding much to the interest of the

"The number of bathers on the beach fronting the Mount Vernon and Congress Hall was also very large; but the Columbia and the Atlantic, which are the great Baltimore and southern resorts, their guests coming here more especially for water epicyments than for fun, fashion, or frolic, far outnumbered all others, though the guests of the Mansion, Ocean House, American and United States Hotels, and other houses, occupy the same

How to be a Man.

Nothing done Without Labor. There is an important principle stated in a remark which we find, occurring in a sketch of the history of Whitney's Cotton Gin. The writer, refering to the labor and toil which the

ABOUT SEIRTS .- We have always been under the impression that the present amplitude of ladies' skirts was susceptible of very little addition. We are undeceived; there is a 'lower depth,' or rather a broader breadth, and the Parisian ladies have found it. They have attained such a latitude that a true merucillease finds some difficulty in entering an ordinary doorway. We can no longer laugh at the hoops of our grandmothers; "we are producing equally great results with lighter means." The following conjugal dialogue gives a lively idea of our object, and at the same time illustrates the praiseworthy docility of Parisian husbands.

An "elegante in her toilette du bal" steps into her carriage, which she and her skirts rather comfortably fill. Her husband proposes to follow-when he is suddenly brought up by "My dear, what are you going to do?" "Do? Why, get into the carriage, to be

"But there is no room!" replies the lady, growing visibly broader. "No room !" replies the astonished husband; "but, my dear-." "When I am entoilette, certainly not; do you want me to arrive at the ball with my dress rumpled ?" In the face of this frightful possibility, the husband is at once silenced. He, however, musters courage enough to say, "But I wish ERS, or other avocations in life, will here receive to go to the ball, my dear."

"And what prevents you, pray. Call a cab, or get up with the coachman." The poor husband not seeming to relish this effectionate suggestion, the lady proceeds with a suspicion of sharpness in her tones that has a very visible effect, "Do as you please, my dear; but as for sitting with me, the thing is impossible; do close the door, the air chills me, and tell the coachman to drive on, or I shall be too late." This cool proceeding achieved, the lady goes to the ball, and doubtless rouses the cavy of many an unhappy bachelor who don't know when he is well off;

A fashionable lady of the financial world has gone still further. Not content with excluding her husband from the carriage on these great occasions, she had built for herself a vehicle without seats. In this affair she goes to the ball, of course obliged to stand up during the drive. This, at the first blush, seems inconvenient; not so -her ingenuity has overcome the apparent difficulty. A velvet covered strap is so disposed as exactly to reach her waist, and against this she leans, supporting herself by two other handstraps, similarly covered. She thus arrives at the ball in full a flower in her coiffars, and perfect as she lef the hands of her dressing maid. The success of the lady at her entree is of course, prodigious. Her grace and wit complete the triumph, and after the fifth waltz and fourth confre-danse she allows herself to become gracefully fatigued, and retires to her husband's carriage, whom, in consequence of her great success, she condescendingly allows to attend her home. - Commissionure.

Couldn't Get Him.

The following is from the last number of the Southern Military Gazette. It reads like one of Hooper's stories.

Old John Sarchem was for many years known as one of the shrewdest men about Montgomery. In fact there were not many persons who did not hesitate to say that his shrewdness was nothing but rascality. The chief peculiarity of old John was, that he could prove anything under the face of the heavens, if he the lawyers got to be afraid of him. One of their number had a note for $100 on old John. lest John should prove a set-off of some sort against it, although there was nothing of the sort existing in reality. A bright thought occurred to Greenbay. He would sue in the name of Peter Squizlefanter, and as no such man ever existed, it would be difficult to show tic manner. The letter is to long-we note that he ever owed Sarchem mything. He did so.
