

THE RAFTSMAN'S JOURNAL.

Japanese Peculiarities.

It seems that the national exclusiveness of this peculiar people is also exhibited in their social habits. The streets of their towns present only a dead wall upon each side, the houses being situated in gardens behind them, and hidden as much as possible by trees and shrubbery.

Their dress consists of one loose robe with girdle about the middle. This is a very cool arrangement for summer weather, but in winter is not quite so comfortable. However, they manage to keep warm by leaping contributions upon each other, for whenever one member of a family goes out in cold weather, he borrows the garments of all who remain within and puts them over the other!

The Japanese idea of a shoe is peculiar. The article with them is simply a sole, and is worn not for the protection of the foot—which in fact it does not cover—but for the preservation of matting upon their floors—the sole being always slipped off at the door, the wear going barefoot in the house. The shoe, therefore, is only intended to keep the foot from contact with the earth, and thus from soiling the matting, which it is a matter of pride to keep very clean.

This, indeed, is a very essential matter, as the matting is used not only for a carpet, but for a table-cloth and mattress as well, being in fact the only article of furniture in the house. The inmates sit, and eat upon the floor.

The Japanese pillow—for they indulge in that luxury, is a curious affair. It consists of a little block of wood, with sides of unequal width, so that by turning it over—which is often done even in sleep—the head may rest at different points of elevation.

This peculiar pillow is made necessary from the fact that the hair is made upright upon the head, matted together with grease and secured by pins, which by their material indicate the rank of the wearer.

This pillow is considered a very comfortable affair, and altogether superior to the bags of feathers on which we outside barbarians are wont to recline our heads.

The Japanese, like the Chinese, take their food with chopsticks, and indicate their enjoyment of it by a loud snoring noise, not at all agreeable to civilized ears.

Being always accustomed to sit with their legs bent up upon the floor, they find it painful to sit on chairs, complaining that the part of the leg which hangs down, "is all the same as if it were cut off."

The mandarins, when they go abroad, have always a great retinue; an umbrella capable of covering thirty or forty persons, is held over their heads, while two men go before with brooms to sweep away evil spirits in the air! They believe in spirits, but not in the immortality of the soul.

When a Japanese gentleman walks abroad he is always accompanied by a servant whose duty it is to carry three essential articles—an umbrella to shade his master—his slippers, for it is the genteel thing to go barefooted, and an eating-box containing food, lest his master should become faint on the way.

When this happens, the gentleman sits down upon the ground, opens his box and eats his dinner. The Japanese are bound to support their parents while living, and to worship them when dead.

This worship is the only social enjoyment they have, for they make an amusement of it, though one would think it a very grave one. In fact the graveyard is the only place of public resort, and is made a place of sensual enjoyment. Every day the household resorts to the family tomb, and there indulges in eating, drinking, and walling alternately.

This is their worship. Formerly they were required to be three years by the graves of their parents, now fifty days will do, and they sometimes even hire men to watch in their stead. This indicates a lamentable decline of piety, which, however, is not without its parallel among the professors of a higher faith.

"Victor Galbreath."—This beautiful lyric by Longfellow, in the May number of Putnam's Magazine, is founded on fact, it appears. The St. Paul (Min.) Democrat gives it and adds to the complete understanding of the poem. Victor was the son of Dr. Galbreath, of Galena, Illinois. He went to Mexico in one of the Illinois regiments. He was a young man of prepossessing appearance, active mind, and too much independence and pride for a soldier.

The writer had forgotten that he was a bugler, which it appears from the poem he was. For some threat against his captain, perhaps provoked by the insolence or tyranny of his superior, he was tried, condemned and shot, as narrated by Mr. Longfellow. The unstrung nerves of the guard, detailed for his execution, destroyed their aim, and at the first discharge he was only horribly mangled.

The second fire "put him out of his pain," and thus ignominiously died "Victor Galbreath by the hands of his own comrades. The news of his melancholy fate, borne to his old father, to his mother, to his brothers and sisters, was but one of the million ripples of grief and agony that flowed from the desolating tide of war. It would have been hard for that old father to have heard news of the death of his son, pierced and heaved by the balls and swords of the enemy, but how inexplicably more sad and heart-rending, that he died by the hands of his messmates and comrades!

"SPLendid Prospect."—We find the following in an exchange, credited to a Northern paper: "Send me three million dollars. (As to what I want with it a word in your ear privately.) I intend to lay down in every street, court, lane, place and alley of Boston, 10,000 miles of iron main, 4 feet in diameter, with 12 inch service pipes entering each house; so far so good. Then I shall commence at the top of the White Mountains to lay a pipe ten feet in diameter into the ground six yards deep, from the said White Mountains to the Main in Boston, which will have been already constructed as before remarked; this done, I shall build a steam engine seven hundred and eighteen thousand horse power, and (lean over this way if you please, I'm afraid somebody might hear) force the freezing atmosphere from the mountains into every house in Boston. There's no mistake about this; it's bound to go; and when it's finished I mean to buy me a pair of boots and go in flat footed for a line of pipes to the tropics, to pump hot air into to houses in winter. These little jobs completed, and we will have our cool weather in July, and in January it shall be warm and comfortable, as it always ought to have been. I guess nature's jig is about up, ain't it?

When the enterprising patentee of the above invention gets through his job, he will please turn his steps in this direction. An importation from the North Pole would be exceedingly acceptable about now.

SAVE THE MAN WITH THE RED HAIR.—It requires great coolness and experience to steer a course down the rapids of the Saunt St. Marie; and a short time before our arrival two Americans had ventured to descend them without boatmen, and were consequently upset.—As the story was reported to us, one of them owed his salvation to a singular coincidence. As the accident took place immediately opposite to the town, many of the inhabitants were attracted to the bank of the river to watch the unfortunate men thinking that any attempt at rescue would be perfectly hopeless. Suddenly, however, a person appeared rushing toward the group frantic with excitement.

"Save the man with the red hair!" he vehemently shouted, and the exertions which were made in consequence of his earnest appeals proved successful, and the red-haired individual, in an exhausted condition, safely landed.

"He owes me eighteen dollars," said his rescuer, drawing a long breath, and looking approvingly on his assistants. The red-haired man's friend had not a creditor at the Saunt and in default of a competing claim was allowed to pay his debts to nature.

"And I'll tell you what it is, stranger," said the narrator of the foregoing, "a man'll never know how necessary he is to society if he don't make himself valuable to his friends as well as to himself.—Blackwood.

A SKEWED DEVIL.—In Afghanistan, a country abounding in legends there is one to the effect that Satan entered into a compact with the people, to teach them to cultivate the earth and bring forth its fruits, the produce to be divided between them. The bargain being made and the soil prepared by the labor of the people, Satan produced his seeds, which in due time came up, as carrots, turnips and other vegetables, the value of which lies beneath the ground. When the division took place, the people in their ignorance, took that which was above the surface. In time they discovered their mistake, and loudly complained of their loss. Upon which Satan with a bland smile, told them that it should be different next year. And so it was. The people were to take all the produce that was beneath the soil. This time the devil had sown all wheat, and barley and other grain, whose fruit is above the surface. So the people twice tricked, got nothing but useless roots.

As "we" came on a Brooklyn ferry-boat the other day, a gentleman, one of the first men evidently, drove on board at a rapid rate, and nearly ran over a man, who seized his horse by the bridle and brought him to a stand still.

"What do you mean," said the driving individual, "by catching hold of my horse?"

"What do you mean by driving over people in this kind of a way?"

"Let go of my horse, I tell you!"

"I'll see you hung first."

The man leaped out of his buggy, and coming rapidly upon the other, whip in hand, cried out:

"I say let go of that horse."

"I say I won't till I get ready."

"Well then," said the driver, throwing his whip into the carriage, "just hold him, will you?" and he walked into the cabin.

That was as quiet, and quite as cute a way to settle a dispute as that adopted by Nooks when he met Stooks in a tight place, and neither could turn out without some danger of overturning their respective carts. "If you don't turn out," said Nooks, "I'll serve you just as I did a man I met half a mile back here in just such a place as this." Stooks was impressed by the decision which Nooks displayed, and promptly complied with the request; but just as he was getting by he inquired,

"How about that man you met—how did you serve him?"

"Well you see," said Nooks, "when I found he wouldn't turn out for me, why I just turned out for him!"

"Who drives fat oxen must himself be fat," is certainly not a very wise observation, if Dr. Johnson did make it. But fat men have sometimes been great men, and have driven other people, though it would be hard work to drive them. There was a Senator of the United States, some years ago, who was so fat that it was said the ferry-boat had to go twice for him to get him over a river. Dr. Beddoes, the English antiquarian, was so enormously wide-spread that he was called a "traveling haystack." A butcher desired him to give out that he bought his meat of him, as it would make his fortune to have it known that he fed such a falstaff.

In the court of Louis XV. lived two lusty noblemen, who were cousins. The King said to one of them, when rallying him on his corpulency, "I suppose you take little or no exercise." "Your Majesty will pardon me," replied the bulky Duke, "but I generally round my cousin two or three times every morning."

Dr. Stafford was so very large that his epitaph was made to match:

"Take heed Oh good traveler, and do not tread hard, For here lies Dr. Stafford, in all this church-yard."

A tallow chandler, remarkable for his own imbecility, was honored with the following lines on his grave-stone:

"Here lies in dirt an honest fellow Who lived by fat and died by tallow."
