For the "Raftsman's Journal." LINES:

ON THE DEATH OF A LITTLE BOY. BY THERESA. (Written in her thirteenth year.) God looked among his cherub band. And found one wanting there ;

For the fairest flower here. His angel came and took away From earth its dearest gem-The sweet bright boy we'd have to stay, He took to dwell with them.

He sent his angel to this land

Even yet, methinks, I see him, His sweet angelic brow; Yet I know it cannot be him; 'Tis but a vision now! We wept-we could not help but weep-

He was so young and fair; But yet we know the grave can't keep His pure young spirit there.

It away from earth has flown, Above the starry sky; Whom Jesus Christ hath called his own, We know can never die; And there they never, never cease, Through long, unending years, To sing of life and joy and peace,

But naught of pain and tears. And he is in that "cherub band," The brightest and the best; A harp of gold is in his hand, And peace within his breast. It was upon the first of May, And on the Sabbath too, God called his spirit far away, His holy will to do. Lumber City, April 26, 1856.
